NEW EDITION
"New Edition"

A catchy, rhythmic single titled "Candy Girl" in 1983 was a chart-topper in five countries including the United States. And the young quintet that recorded that smash is back on MCA with their latest LP simply titled "New Edition."

The members of this group are all between 15 and 16 years old. Their names: Ricky Bell, Michael Bivins, Bobby Brown, Ronnie De Voe and Ralph Tresvant.

Their first album, as you probably know, was a collection of hook-filled tunes, in which pop songs in the Motown mold were garnished with hip-hop instrumentations. The lead vocals on "Candy Girl" really did sound like 1970's Michael Jackson, and the New Edition managed to incorporate the styles of their idols in their other songs — artists like The Sylvers and The Temptations.

It was no wonder why "Is This The End" never failed to remind me of the Jackson Five's "I'll Be There."

Their new effort is somewhat less exciting. Their first single from the new album, "Cool It Now," is probably going to need massive airplay to score a hit — this one doesn't show off the boys' talents as well as some of their past stuff, although it's a poppin' and rockin' tune in the spirit of "Candy Girl."

"Kinda Girls We Like" is one of the most interesting tunes on the new album. Basically, it picks up where the rap portion of "Candy Girl" left off. It's an electric showcase of rapping and instrumental breaks, and serves to brighten up an otherwise ordinary side 2 (didn't know they could write songs, did you?).

"Mr. Telephone Man" was written and produced by Ray Parker, Jr., who appears on bass, guitar, drums and synthesizer, so it is no wonder that it sounds like a New Edition cover of "A Woman Needs Love." Can't fault the boys for working with a proven hitmaker.

Other cuts: "I'm Leaving You Again," "Baby Love," "Delicious," "My Secret (Didja Git It Yet?)," "Hide And Seek," "Lost In Love," "Maryann."

Melba Moore is On Her Way

Don't despair if you have been trying to find the other side of the rainbow of the Baltimore-Washington corridor's music scene—Melba Moore is on her way to Howard University where she will teach cultural enthusiasts to "Never Say Never" no matter how frustrating their guest for spiritual enrichment through the arts may become.

In fact the phrase "Never Say Never," which is also the title of Melba Moore's recent album, summarizes the determination and zeal that have led to her success in the entertainment industry. Firmly believing in herself, Ms. Moore decided to defy the odds a few years ago by putting aside her shyness to embark on a show business career. She was in the midst of a successful teaching career, but was becoming increasingly dissatisfied with her profession. She says "I think that it's very important for people to decide what makes them happy and then to take steps to proceed in that direction, regardless of what other people's opinions might be. Sometimes you just have to follow your own instincts."

Armed with sheer determination and intestinal fortitude Melba capitalized on the piano and dance lessons her parents began giving her when she was nine years old and used her talents to obtain employment in nightclubs and piano bars after she left teaching. "I had some good breaks and I was soon receiving opportunities to record as a background vocalist" she says. Her determination to succeed also led her to a minor part in the controversial Broadway play "Hair," where she worked for a year-and-a-half, eventually landing the female lead. "This was considered quite a coup and they even announced it on the front page of the New York Times. I was the first Black to ever take over a Broadway leading role from a white girl. I guess it could have only happened in 'Hair,' one of the most unusual plays to succeed on Broadway," says Ms. Moore.

Continuing her career in musical comedies, Melba Moore went on to win a Tony, the New York Drama Critics Award, the Theatre World Award and the Drama Desk Award for the starring role in the Broadway musical hit "Purlie. She also began pursuing a career as a solo recording artist, utilizing her four octave voice to maximum advantage on best-selling albums like "Peach Melba," "This Is It," and "The Other Side of the Rainbow."

Describing the gusto and verve with which she approaches her career, Melba says "I'm not a workaholic, but I do like to throw myself into my work and I like the people I'm working with to do the same. So I have to really like the project I'm working on since I know that I'm going to make a fulltime commitment to whatever I decide to become involved with."

To fully understand the magnificent range of Melba Moore's four octave voice and the intense energies she brings to every performance, one must see her in person because records do not truly capture her galvanic performing abilities.

Patrice Rushen Here For Morgan's Homecoming

By Frederick Douglass

Patrice Rushen, the tiny keyboard player and vocalist who is currently riding high on the charts with two tunes from her "Now" album entitled "Get Off" and "Feels So Real (Won't Let Go)," will be appearing in Morgan State University's Hill Field House on October 20 along with vocalist Jeffrey Osborne as part of the institution of higher learning's Homecoming festivities.

Patrice Rushen's first album "Preclusion" was strictly instrumental, displaying her ability to switch readily from funky tracks to more complex compositions and displaying her mastery of both Jazz and classical idioms. During her stint with Prestige, she also recorded "Before The Dawn" and "Shout It Out," two albums which gained her critical acclaim and increased demands for her services as a studio musician.

Recalling her early experiences with other artists, Patrice says: "My first recording date with someone else was on violinist Jean - Luc Ponty's 'Upon The Wings Of Music.' I was also getting session calls for a lot of R&B sets, and did albums with Jazz and crossover artists like Alphonse Johnson, Eddie Henderson, Lee Titenour and Horyvey Mason. I was really busy. I worked with guitarist Lee Ritenour off and on for two years at a club called the Baked Potato; and I was also playing with Hubert Laws' band doing commercials and just trying to take on every challenge that came my way. During 1978, I got to record my fourth album 'Patrice' which gave me even greater opportunities to work with and learn from other musicians."

Augmenting her skills as a keyboard artist, Patrice Rushen is also a skilled composer and every tune on her latest album "Now" represents her immense creativity because she wrote several of the songs by herself and collaborated with other artists on a few tunes. Right now, Patrice Rushen's musical future looks very bright. Be sure to check her out live at Morgan State on October 20 so you can hear her playing "Get Off" and "Feels So Real" in person.
