become a pacesetter-assistant and later chief resident in internal medicine at Sinai Hospital.

At the time of his death, he was a board certified internist with offices in Garwyn Medical Center with Drs. Roland Smoot and Donald Stewart.

And, he was attending physician at Sinai, Lutheran, and Johns Hopkins Hospital, where he formerly was on the hospital's medical faculty, and at Provident Hospital, where he formerly was chief of medicine.

Altar boy

He was active in numerous medical societies and so likable that associates—friends, as well as strangers—were attracted by his pleasant and assuring manner.

We remember him as a child growing up in St. James Episcopal Church. He served on the altar—when he was just five years old!!

He kept a lifetime interest in his church—was a member of the vestry, the church's governing board.

He belonged to the Patrons Club at McDonogh School, the Morgan State University Varsity M Club, the Chi Delta Mu, medical fraternity, Sigma Pi Phi, called the Boule, and Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, and he kept up his interest in sports-being an avid football and soccer fan and enjoying his hobbies - golf and tennis.

On Friday, Jan. 11, Dr. Young and his wife attended a physical fitness class, then he went on to McDonogh School to watch his younger son practice football. He was found slumped over the wheel of his car. He had had no prior history of heart trouble.

St. James Church was packed for the farewell services for Dr. Young. At the Tuesday evening wake, over 200 Kappa men participated in fraternal services.

Burial mass

At the Wednesday noon burial mass, the 600-seat sanctuary was packed. Extra chairs lined the main aisles and mourners stood around the room, three deep in the rear. The porch of the church and the balcony were crowded.

Beautiful — the rendition of "Ave Maria" and "There Is a Balm In Gilad" by Millie Williams, daughter of St. James rector, Father Donald O. Wilson who conducted the impressive 90-minute rites.

Blessings on Dr. Young's family—his wife of 18 years, Wilhelmina Howard Young, the Community College administrator; their sons, Robert Louis Young, 3rd, 16; and Damon Howard Young, 14, both McDonogh students; his mother, Mrs. Alyce King Young, the retired East Baltimore city teacher;

And, mother-in-law and father-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Manning C. Howard of Rockville, Md., and aunts, Mrs. Ivora King Gibson and Ms. Mildred King, both of Baltimore.

His dad

More memory lane: Dr. Young's dad before him was a pacesetter too. He was Robert Louis Young, Sr., the beloved East Baltimore mortician. His funeral parlor was in the 800 block N. Carolin St.

At one time, he had to wage a court fight for the right to conduct his business in the area.

In 1938, Baltimore witnessed what was then called "the largest funeral in memory", that of famed musician, Chick Webb. The Young Funeral Home was in charge.

The senior Mr. Young was called "Hoggie", a nickname he acquired as a student at Lincoln University.

He, too, set precedents. He was one of the first black undertakers to be hired at the Baltimore city morgue.

The funeral program describes Dr. Young as "a man who gave so much of himself and touched the lives of so many." How true. And so did his dad before him.

And more

More sadness during recent holiday time: Mrs. Clara Jones Patterson Perrin, 90, was buried in her native Gloucester, Va. on December 15. Rites were at Rising Valley Baptist Church.

For many years, Mrs. Perrin lived in the 1500 block of Madison Ave., was active in Metropolitan and Enon Baptist Churches, belonged to the Eastern Star and the YWCA, where she sang with the Martha Murphy Singers.

Survivors: Son, Wilbert P. Jones; daughter-in-law, Harriet White Jones, both of Baltimore; granddaughters, Pamela Jones and Carol Jones Listenbee, both of Los Angeles; and Humphrey B. White, Nashville.

Also, sister, Mrs. Ruth L. Payne, Gloucester; and brother, John Patterson, Baltimore.

Holiday was not so happy for Miss Betty Williams, the retired city school principal. She buried her brother, Wallace Williams, 64, on December 11.

He made his home with her ever since 1948 when he returned from World War II duty and was afflicted with meningitis and related ailments. God bless.

Many more: Mrs. Samuel R. Owings, (Barbara), was in her native Tennessee last week. Her uncle, Melvin Dickerson, was killed in an auto accident.

Sad 1984 loss: In looking back over the year, we forgot to mention the Oct. 4th death of one of Baltimore's gracious ladies—Mrs. Tillie T. Young, 83. She was the widow of Robert Young, the realtor and philanthropist (Both husband and wife administred the Charles C. Cook Scholarship Foundation for needy students were responsible for the first of our youngsters to enter St. John University.

Survivors: Daughter, Mrs. Tillie Pair, with whom she made her home on W. Lanvale St., son, Dr. Robert J. Young, Mexico City; grandson, James Pair, Jr., Montego Bay; his wife Vicki, and their 2-year-old Mercedes Pair.

Another sad note: Ms. Silvine Thompson of Pikesville who died at the veterans hospital in D.C. on Jan. 26th, was the longtime employee of University Hospital. She was active in the Pitch and Putt Golf Club and in St. Katherine Episcopal Church.

Good news: Cecil Flamer, the CPA, is much improved after that bout with illness. Also on the mend, Bea Wright, the retired school principal. She had foot surgery.

100 years old

Mrs. Pauline Valentine Hines was born 100 years ago on Jan. 3, 1885, the daughter of Howard and Margaret Valentine. Her dad was a railroad employee.

The former Miss Valentine was married to the late Herbert Hines. For years, the family lived in the Cedar Hill section, now known as Glen Burnie. Before his death in 1971, Mr. Hines was superintendent of Arbutus Memorial Park.

Mrs. Hines is a lifetime member of John Wesley Methodist Church in Glen Burnie.

On her 100th birthday, relatives and friends gathered to remember the old days and to bless Mrs. Hines.

Five of her six living children were present- Mrs. Pauline Gardner, with whom she lives on Woodhaven Ave., Mrs. Lydia Grinage, Lawrence Hines, Mrs. Mabel Young, Mrs. Muriel Phinney, all of Baltimore. A son, Charles Hines, lives in Pasadena, Calif.

Many others: 30 grandchildren and 15 great grands, attended the family dinner party and the open house for well wishers which followed.

President and Mrs. Reagan sent greetings. So did Governor Hughes. Channel 13's Richard Sher presented the station's award.

Happy birthday to a grand lady.

87 candles

Mrs. John H. Murphy Jr., (Marie), observed her 87th birthday on Thursday, (Jan. 17). She spent the day at her N. Carey St. home, and then went with friends to the Ice show at the Civic Center.

Her recipe for long life: "I just try to be myself. I still go to church regularly (St. Peter Claver), and am able to drive myself to places I want to go. Yes, the Lord is good."

In her active years, Mrs. Murphy was a golf champion. Handsome trophies on display in her home attest to her skill. She still enjoys watching golf and other sports shows on television.

Mrs. Murphy, the former Marie Spriggs, is the widow of John H. Murphy, Jr., this newspaper's longtime circulation director and namesake of the founder. He died in 1973 at the age of 93.

Happy birthday!!!

About people

Jonathan D. Cahn, the 26-year-old lawyer who was sworn in to practice in Maryland, on Thursday, (Jan. 17), has rich Baltimore ties.

First off, he is the son of Baltimore-born Jean Camper Cahn, an attorney, and her attorney-husband, Edgar S. Cahn. His maternal grandma is Mrs. Florine Camper of N. Carey St. His grandpop was the late Dr. James E.T. Camper, the physician.

The new lawyer's parents maintain law offices in D.C., and live part of the time in Coral Gables, Fla., where they're doing exciting things in law and teaching at the University of Miami.

Young Jonathan is a graduate of Harvard Law School. He and his Indian princess-wife, Hinebah, have settled in the Baltimore-Washington area. He has joined a prestigious law firm. She is chief lobbyist for the Navajo tribe.

Lawyers run in the Cahn family. Younger brother, Ruben, 25, finished Yale Law School, is clerk for a N.Y. federal judge.

Paternal grandpop Edmund Cahn, Sr., a N.Y. law school professor was described as the "most famous jurisprudentential scholar of our time," at the time of his death in 1963.

More people on the move: Dillard T. Massey, for many years manager of the N.C. Mutual's Mutual Life Insurance Co.'s Baltimore office, is now settled in his native Charlotte, N.C.

He and his family moved there two months ago, they accepted a new post with another large insurance firm (All State).

Many a N.C. Mutual customer will miss his friendly voice and helpful advice.

More people

People being kind to others: Mrs. Alfred Moore, (Nellie) has a way with words and her original poems bring joy to many.

It was so on Sunday, Jan. 6, when she read one of them at the 70th birthday dinner party given Mrs. Marion Banfield by her husband, Dr. Gilbert L. Banfield Sr., and their children.

It was a glorious event, with children and grands participating fully exhibiting their talents and showing how grandma has influenced their lives. Love was bursting out all over.

It remained for Mrs. Moore, a longtime family friend, to sum it up in her verse. It said:

"Seventy years of loving and giving,
Seventy years packed full of living...70 years of hoping and praying...allowing...forgiving...advising...weighing...patiently waiting God's will to do...courageously facing each task in view...generous of spirit...outgoing...warm...witty...wise and full of charm.
With a song in her heart that is born of spring...sprinkled with tenderness for everything.
Yes, 70 years of loving and giving...70 years packed full of living..."

Cuff note: Forgot to mention in our 1984 year-end review column that the year was special for the Alfred Moores (mentioned above). In July, family noted their 50th wedding anniversary with special service at Grace Presbyterian Church.

Daughters who arranged the event were, Katherine, who is with a N.Y. ballet company; Rosalie, an educator and author in San Rasael, Calif., Angella, with a Philly insurance firm; and Virginia, a teacher in Milwaukee, where she lives with her husband, James Abraham, now a Milwaukee Journal staffer.

New Jersey and dozens of other U.S. cities, demanding jobs, peace and freedom.

In 1984, Black American voters came out as an organized force advancing their own demands. In the center of that movement was Jesse Jackson, who held out through the Democratic primaries contrary to expectations. Underlying the success of the black leader was, among other things, his ability to involve a greater number of black voters, calling the sleeping giant to awaken from sleep. Thus, the ideas of Martin Luther King, who was the first to advocate changes in the registration procedure were coming true.

Martin Luther King's birthday has been placed on the U.S. political calendar and has been declared a national holiday. This is the result of many years of work by those who wished to pay tribute to the memory of the outstanding black American leader.

By observing the birthday of Martin Luther King, those who adhere to the ideals of equality and freedom can turn their thoughts not only to this man but also to the problems of civil rights.

Improving the effectiveness of school level administrators is the object of a collaborative new effort by Maryland local school systems, the state education agency, and institutions of higher education.

State school superintendent David W. Hornbeck has named a 26 - member commission to examine key aspects of school - based administration, including the role and function of school - based leadership personnel, preparation programs in institutions of higher education, licensing practices of the State Department of Education, selection and evaluation practices by local school systems, and staff development activities at all levels.

Hornbeck also asked the commission to serve as a policy advisory board for two statewide activities; a regional assessment center program for school - based leadership personnel and a research and development laboratory at the University of Maryland which will support the assessment center and investigate other issues dealing with school - based leadership.

"We are delighted with the progress already achieved and with the commitment demonstrated by participant organizations even before the formal appointment of the commission," Hornbeck sayd. "I take it as a sign that we will achieve significant improvement in the way we prepare, license, select, develop, and evaluate principals."

In a charge to the commission Hornbeck said, "We enter upon this effort because of our belief, supported by research and numerous professional studies, that the school - based administrator, particularly the school principal, is the most important factor in developing effective schools."

He pointed out that participating school systems, the State Board of Education, and higher education institutions are governed by their own administrations and boards and that "at appropriate moments" actions of the commission will require consent at those levels.

The chairman of the commission is Dr. Joseph L. Shilling, deputy state superintendent of schools. All commission members are professional educators or local board members. Their terms will extend to June 1988. The commission will hold its organizational meeting on January 14 at the Adult Education Center in College Park.
