STUDENTS, FACULTY, ALUMNI ARE SO PROUD

Carver anticipates 60th year fete

An overall shot is shown of Carver cosmetology students.

By Twilah Scarborough

Moving right along and forward to a week of self-expressed celebration.

An historical occasion will take place during the week of April 6. Carver Vocational-Technical High School will be celebrating 60 years of continued service to Baltimoreans. The faculty, alumni and student body would like to share their celebration with the community and other citizens of Baltimore.

Kenneth Parham: senior/athlete

With the 60th Anniversary just a few weeks off, now is the time to share a few golden moments with you about one of Carver's promising and leading students.

Kenneth Parham, the athlete. One who likes to talk about his skills in exercise and sports. Kenneth is in his senior year and soon will be walking across the stage of Carver High to receive his diploma. While interviewing Kenneth recently, one could not help but notice how this soft-spoken person has made up his mind and knows what the future holds for him after graduation. The young athlete, upon being interviewed, kept me looking, smiling, and asking him question after question.

Kenneth was graduated from Booker T. Washington High School with low grades, both in sports and academic courses, but he had a long talk with himself and was determined to make something of himself. Upon entering Carver it went a little slow at first. But he began to adjust. He stated that he "learned to keep silent and listen. I had to read and learn to practice what I preached to myself and to just keep going forward and do the right thing."

Kenneth, at 18 years old now is in his last year at Carver, has this to say: "The family at Carver High School helped me to be where I am today. The family helped me make the right directions and right decisions of moving forward. I spend most of my time at Carver. It's part of my intake and my second home. I eagerly look forward to going to school. The Carver family is in charge when I am away from home - my real home. My mother, Anne Parham, my favorite lady is a mother of five sons, and we are one big happy family.

"My mother works, and we all hang in there together. I know my mother is really proud of me especially when she gives me a great big smile. So you see when I say I leave home to come to Carver, it is a must with me like it is a must that I continue to do the right thing, especially if I want to get along in this world and come out on top and just be what I want to be.

"I had to prepare myself in order to get great grades. One has to if you want to participate in sports and complete. My whole life is sports and being a good athlete."

I asked Kenneth what his views were regarding his fellow athletes and their appearance on television when being interviewed. His reaction was the same as mine and that is when the time comes for us to be interviewed on television we should get our acts cleaned up. Our English should be good, understandable English, and we should adapt ourselves to good public speaking habits.

When Kenneth is not practicing or studying, he watches the ball games (football, basketball, baseball). It bothers him a great deal to see our black athletes being interviewed with very poor English after doing such a great job on the field or court.

Kenneth keeps saying to himself that he is going to be better than that. When he gets to the top where he wants to be he will make us all very proud when his time comes to be interviewed.

He participates in tennis, football, and wrestling. Kenneth keeps exercising so that he can maintain and control.

Recently he participated in MSA-All Star Football Team and played the position of running-back, rushing over 1,000 yards for the 1985-86 season.

He has a wrestling record of 34-4. In the MSA Wrestling Tournament, he beat his opponents 9-0 to win first place.

Upon graduation, he plans to attend either Delaware State or Morgan State. "I want to enter the field of teaching physical education or math," he said.

Kenneth is a firm believer that Carver High School encouraged him and helped him to take the right path. Carver encouraged him to take a better look at himself and to believe that there is a better world out there for him.

He says, "I have something instilled in me and I am going after it. I am going back to church and get closer to God like I was before. I believe that there is room there for me also."

During the interview, I was fortunate enough to have lunch in the diningroom. There was a delicious lunch prepared by Department heads, Betty Mello and Priscilla Abny and served by students-in-training. They gave us the royal treatment.

So Kenneth Parham, with thoughts of wisdom, goodwill, determination, and your practices and principles of sports and good nature you are "Solid Gold."

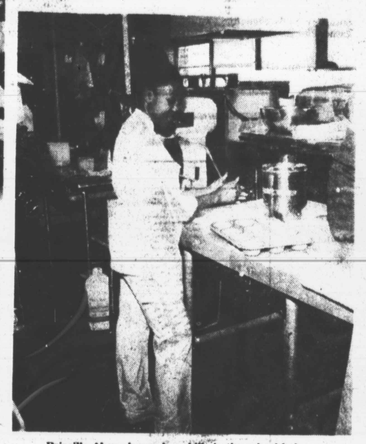
Cosmetology Room 236:

Two adjoining rooms are the home of beauty and culture classes. There are 32 young talented ladies in these classes.

The girls learn the daily routine of practicing their skills in beauty culture, hair care and the proper handling of hair culture.

Tina Fitzhugh and Catherine Green are the instructors. The classrooms have an excellent poster posted outside their doors: "What's a Business Career-Partnership?" "How can it open doors of opportunity for you? Why not get involved?"

With this kind of attitude along with determination, students, upon graduation, would do wonders for Carver, business and industry. These two classrooms are getting it together for their next stop—their future.



Priscilla Abney learns her skills in the school bakery.

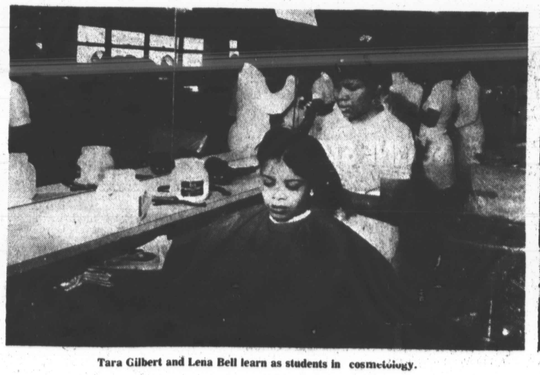
Julia Simmons practices her craft and works with hair curlers.



Tara Gilbert and Lena Bell learn as students in cosmetology.
