"SINGLE WOMEN, MAP OUT YOUR STRATEGY"

There are too many women singing the blues about not being able to find a compatible mate. There are books out for singles telling you where singles hang out; there are books on how to share your man, and then there is the woman waiting for her knight in shining armor.

Why do women feel guilty about planning strategies when looking for Mr. Right? Because society used to say that it is wrong. In order to feel happy and loved by the right man, and not end up in the large barrel, with other women who say "I always end up with the wrong man," you must look at a couple of barriers that may be holding you back.

With the holiday season upon us, where does one begin? Begin with yourself. Analyze your wants and don't wants. Know what kind of man you are looking for. Don't become like Cinderella and wait for your knight or princess to knock on your door. You may find out that if you wait for this to happen you may have a head full of gray hair by the time you hear the knock on the door.

Are you a Cinderella type? Are you looking for a Peter Pan man? Cinderellas are looking for someone who can take care of them. They can't make their decisions on their own. They feel that life isn't complete unless they have a man in their lives along with children.

Cinderella always seems to be running after a man who has been blowing in the wind and is the type to never settle down. Cinderella wears blinders on the first date. If the man says he is going to call the next night but never does, she is compelled to call him. He shows her signs of rejection, she still continues to run after him. If she knows that he has other women in his life, she tries to tame him. She won't take "No" for an answer. She seems to be obsessed with this man who tells her lies.

She really can't remember anything positive about "Peter Pan" other than the fact that he seems to say the right things at the right time. She clings to the lyrics in those records that say "ain't nothing going on but the rent." Yet she continues to look for him. He hasn't made any commitments, and is very evasive.

Then there are the women who fall into a routine. In their relationships they begin to act like married couples of 25 years or more. They take each other for granted. She becomes so accustomed to his smile and ways, that she forgets about what it took to get him.....those evenings of perfurmed intimacy and makeup to the minute.

On the other hand, Peter Pan is confused himself. He is unable to make a commitment. He looks at his career as the only milestone in his life. Underneath it all, he really wants a loving relationship, but is unable to show his emotions because cinderellas usually send double messages. Most women will say that they want a man to show his true feelings, and when he does open up....tears and all, she thinks of him as being weak.

If you are mapping out your strategy for the holidays, here are a few quick tips that may help you find Peter Pan. Don't look for the man who is the best looking of them all. Chances are his pot is already full, and if you decide to jump in too, you find yourself drowning in your own tears.

What kind of person are you looking for: professional, intellectual, a homebody, masculine, sporty type, etc?.

Map out your location on where to find Mr. Right. Once you find him, you had better map out your strategy on how to keep him. Ask yourself, "How does one keep the romance and intrigue in a relationship?" If you don't know how, you may find yourself back out on the streets looking again.

When you meet someone, take off your blinders. Most women ignore the handwriting on the wall. Women are usually impressed by a man's looks and intellectual level, forget the fact that he said he would call you last night and didn't. Or that he makes you promises and never keeps them. Or that he is always late, or that when you went over his place, the phone kept on ringing.

Don't let other people tell you what you should be doing. Make sure that you keep your own identity. More than 70 percent of all relationships built by women fail because women acquiesce to male. The woman does what he likes, she waits for him before she makes any decisions; he orders the food when out to dinner.

If you aren't sure what category you and your love interest fall into, either a Cinderella or the many a Peter Pan, go to your local book store and ask for the books entitled The Cinderella Syndrome or Peter Pan Syndrome.
