Dozen white teenagers charged in N.Y. mob attack on blacks

NEW YORK — A dozen white teenagers — including three accused of murder — were charged Tuesday in a mob attack on three black men, one of whom was chased to his death in an all-white New York City enclave in December.

Two of those facing the murder charge had earlier been indicted for reckless endangerment. But the third youth, not previously named, apparently provided key evidence that led to Tuesday's charges, the most serious and far-reaching yet in a case that has fueled racial tensions in the city and the nation.

The nine others were named on a variety of counts ranging from attempted murder to rioting.

"This kind of thing can happen . . . where people distrust and hate because of an accident of birth and indeed it (has) happened all over the world," said special prosecutor Charles Hynes, who was named by Gov. Mario Cuomo to investigate the case in the Howard Beach neighborhood.

"It's (a case) about hate and distrust. It's not an indictment of Howard Beach," he said following arraignment of the youths in state Supreme Court in Queens.

All 12 youths, who range in age from 16 to 19, pleaded not guilty and were ordered back to court March 6. Two youths were denied bail. Bail for the others ranged up to $15,000.

The third murder defendant and informant in the special prosecutor's case was released on his own recognizance.

One black man, Michael Griffith, 23, was killed in the racial attack Dec. 20 when he was chased by a mob of teenagers into a busy highway and run down by at least one car. He and two other blacks had stopped to use a phone in a pizza parlor in the white Howard Beach neighborhood after their car broke down.

The case had been bogged down by a dispute between the surviving victims and the Queens Borough district attorney.

Hynes were appointed by Cuomo to break the deadlock and uncovered new evidence provided bya witness to the night of violence.

Those named on second-degree murder charges were Scott Kern, 18, Jon Lester, 17, who already was being held in jail in a separate case, and Robert Riley, 17, the apparent informant.

State Supreme Court Justice Alfred Lerner said, "This case is an American tragedy."

Hynes remarked, "The probability of conviction is substantial." Besides the three youths charged with murder, five were charged with second-degree manslaughter, four with second-degree attempted murder, four with assault, six with sec ond-degree assault, all 12 with rioting; two with inciting to riot, three with conspiracy and two with criminal facilitation.

JUST AWAITING — Thousands of travelers encircled the Greyhound bus station last week to purchase 59 cent tickets to anywhere the company serves. Police estimated that more than 2,500 persons were still in line an hour after the time the line was cut off. Travelers had from noon until 1 p.m. to get in line to buy the tickets.

Marshall seeks raise for County legal staff

Prince George's County's newly elected chief prosecutor says his lawyers need higher pay if the county is to remain competitive with its metropolitan neighbors.

State's Attorney Alex Williams said he wants his deputy state's attorneys to get pay increases of $7,500, up to $61,583. He also is asking that assistant state's attorneys get $5,000 pay raises, to $56,000.

Williams' plan is part of a bill under review by the Maryland General Assembly. That bill and five others were presented to the County Council Tuesday. They also include pay raise proposals for the sheriff's staff and school board and liquor board members.

Williams, who defeated 24-year state's attorney veteran Arthur Marshall in the September Democratic primary, said his deputy state's attorneys make $7,000 less than comparable attorneys at the county Office of Law, and $17,000 less than their counterparts in Montgomery County.

"All we're asking here is parity," said Williams. "Since 1983, we have an 82 percent turnover of lawyers. We believe one of the reasons for that is that the salaries of the attorneys have not kept up with surrounding counties.

"We want to remove incentive for a good trial lawyer to leave our office and go over to the county attorney's office," he said.

The legislators in Annapolis and Upper Marlboro are also considering a proposal to increase by five the number of prosecutors on the county staff. There are currently 37 prosecutors.

To become law the bills would have to first be approved by the General Assembly. County Council would have veto rights, because salary increases would come out of the county budget.

Town meeting reviews drug abuse and elderly

Kathy Blunt, producer/host of the popular "Eye On Washington" program on WDCA TV Channel 20, will moderate a special town meeting, Drug Abuse And The Elderly, at Galilee Baptist Church, 2252 Minnesota Avenue, S.E.

This unique forum will take place next Wednesday, beginning at 7 p.m. This is the sixth in a series of public hearings and training programs sponsored by Galilee Baptist Church, with the technical assistance of Progressive Health Associates.

Previous topics have included: "PCP and Cocaine: Twin Terrors in Our Community," "Drug Abuse and Athletes," "Drug Abuse and Today's Woman," "Drug Abuse: What Parents Should Do," and "Holiday Drug Abuse."

Progressive Health Associates (PHA) is a prominent Washington, D.C. based health care consulting firm, specializing in direct family-oriented health care services, medical communications, and health promotion/disease prevention training programs.

The training programs at Galilee Baptist Church are part of the Church-Based Health Promotion Initiative, developed by Progressive Health Associates to prevent drug abuse, teen pregnancy, and cardiovascular disease. According to the Medical Director, Karl E. Hammonds, M.D., "Our senior years should be happy, healthy, and fulfilling. Many of the elderly, however, face poverty, loneliness, and chronic debilitating disease. Drug abuse among the elderly takes many forms, including non-prescription and prescription medications, alcohol abuse, and other long-term substances.

"This epidemic is hidden to the public, but plagues many families, social service agencies, and health care professionals. Drug abuse is a problem of the entire community, not just the youth."

Coalition calls for $20 Million increase

ANNAPOLIS (UPI) — The Reproductive and Infant Health Coalition called on Gov. William Schaefer recently to increase funding for family planning services and infant-care programs by more than $15 million in fiscal 1988.

Schaefer has targeted almost $5 million in his spending plan, including $3.5 million for a new federal Medicaid program for poor pregnant women, $1.2 million for infant care up the age of 1, and $220,000 for two new family support centers.

The coalition of 39 groups, critiquing Schaefer's budget at a news conference, said the new governor's budget "represents a nine percent decrease from fiscal 1987 in the share of total funds allocated for health care" by former Gov. Harry Hughes.

Lindsay Thompson, co-chairman of the coalition, praised Schaefer's efforts to increase funding for infant health care, but said the group was disappointed that the new governor had included only a $33,000 increase for family planning services statewide.

"This is the biggest failing we see in the governor's budget," Thompson said, adding the coalition wants the state to spend $2 million annually under a five-year plan to expand family planning services statewide.

The coalition also wants $1 million for family support centers statewide and language in the budget to develop a five-year plan to start up the centers.

And the group called for a prenatal assistance program that also covers delivery and postpartum care for poor pregnant women who are ineligible for Medicaid at a cost of $6.7 million annually. No money was put in the budget for that program, the coalition said.

Bobi Seabolt, of the Women's Health Coalition, said for every dollar the state spent on family planning services, $2.70 was saved on future services. In cases of teenage pregnancy, family planning would save $3.50 for every state dollar spent, she added.

"It's really a crying shame that we see only $33,000 increase in this budget when we know the need is so great," said Steven Rivelis of Planned Parenthood.

Local women honored by Cancer Society

Two Washington area women were recently recognized by the American Cancer Society (ACS) for excellent and dedicated service to the Society.

Vivian L. Smith and Vera L. Hunter were honored at the recent semi-annual meeting of the ACS District of Columbia Division Board of Trustees.

Vivian L. Smith, M.S.W., director of the Area D Community Mental Health Center at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, received the Edward F. Bartelt Award, named in honor of the late Bartelt who initiated cancer education programs in the Federal Government. The Bartelt Award is given to a government employee who has demonstrated distinguished service in the cause of cancer control over a period of many years.

Smith joined the Southeast Unit of the American Cancer Society in 1973 as a volunteer, and since that time has made significant contributions to the Society's public and professional education, patient services and crusade efforts.

She was elected President of the Unit's Board of Directors in 1978, a post she held for 3 consecutive years. She has chaired the Southeast Unit's annual Luncheon and Fashion Show for many years, and has served on the Nominating, Program Evaluation, and Service and Rehabilitation committees of the Unit as well.

In 1979, Smith was elected Assistant Secretary of the District of Columbia Division's Board of Trustees, a position that she held until 1982, when she became Secretary to the Board. She continues as a member of the Board of Trustees.

Vera L. Hunter received the second annual Charles E. Qualls Award, an honor bestowed upon a volunteer of the Division's Southeast Washington Unit who has demonstrated outstanding service in the cause of cancer control in the Southeast Area. The award is named in honor of the late Dr. Qualls, the first president of the Southeast Unit, who remained an active ACS volunteer for over twenty years.

Hunter, an Administrative Assistant for St. Elizabeth's Hospital, began her volunteer work with the Southeast Unit in 1978 as an office volunteer and member of the Board. In 1979, she became involved in the Unit's Luncheon and Fashion Show and the Annual Gala Ball, and she has been active in those events ever since.

As a member of the Public Education Committee, Hunter saw the desperate need for additional programs in the Southeast Community. Responding to this need, she initiated contact with community leaders and organized highly successful public education programs in the Southeast Area.

House panel says administration is insensitive to homeless needs

A hearing on the homeless became the latest battleground in the war over which party is more compassionate, as House Democrats blasted the administration for trying to cut a food program for the poor.

Members of a House Agriculture subcommittee on nutrition scolded Assistant Agriculture Secretary John Bode Tuesday over an administration attempt to cut $28 million from the emergency food program at the same time President Reagan has made hunger and homelessness a top priority.

The administration would have used the money for executive pay raises.

Congress, as part of a $50 million bill for homeless assistance, voted to restore the $28 million to the food program. Reagan has not yet signed the bill.

"John Mitchell used to say, 'Watch not what we say, but what we do,' " said subcommittee Chairman Leon Panetta, D-Calif., referring to Richard Nixon's attorney general.

"Words are nice but action is what counts, and the department's view is that the best way to cure the problem of hunger is to cut the money," he said. "I'd like to apply that (logic) to defense," naming one of the areas where Reagan has asked for funding increases. "The
