five stores the company said it plans to re-open in Baltimore during the next three to six months, McNair said.

Once those steps have been completed McNair said the firm then will begin hiring operations personnel such as store managers, assistant managers, food preparers, shift supervisors, cashiers and others.

Hill and Sons will develop "an in-house training program, because the company is adamant that we will provide a quality product coupled with a first class image," McNair said.

At the time, Chicken George was reported to have had annual sales of more than $13 million.
