CAREER AND EDUCATION

CCB's Center for English as a Second Language provides English language training to members of the Baltimore area immigrant community. More than 35 nationalities and over 25 languages are represented in the program which was founded in 1981 and has grown to be the largest E.S.L. program in the Baltimore area serving over 600 students a year.

Changes in the international political arena impact CCB's English program directly: the more liberal emigration policy for Jewish citizens of the Soviet Union has recently caused an influx of immigrants from that country into CCB's E.S.L. program.

In addition to ESL instruction, the Center for E.S.L. offers courses in citizenship preparation.

Weekend Teachers College heads for home stretch

Thirteen non-traditional students are ready to swing into their final semester of Western Maryland College's first annual Weekend Teacher's College.

The one-year program, taught primarily in the evenings and on weekends, provides a training ground and certification for would-be teachers.

The students, who are drawn from as far away as southern Pennsylvania and central Maryland, already possess bachelor's degrees and want to become certified elementary or secondary school teachers.

Parallel programs were simultaneously launched at Western Maryland, the University of Maryland, Coppin State College and Bowie State University.

"Some participants are 1986 WMC graduates, while others are mid-life career changers," said Helen Wolfe, WMC's associate dean for academic affairs who directs the weekend program.

"They're very excited, energetic, very committed types of people who are really very self-motivated," Wolfe added.

Charlotte Curry, mother of three and Carroll County resident, is an elementary education student in the Weekend Teacher's College, and said she is taking advantage of the program to boost her career.

Curry said she works part time as a substitute teacher and does volunteer work, but she wants to teach full time and therefore needs certification.

"I think it's a wonderful program," Curry said. "It's nice that it's consolidated so we can finish it up in one year."

Jerry Donald, a 1986 WMC graduate now living in Braddock Heights and working in Frederick, said the program offered him the opportunity to become a high school social studies teacher.

"Certainly when I started the program it was very hectic during the summer session with four class nights each week, but I could still work and do it," Donald said.

"That is the program's biggest asset — that it caters to working people who want to go back to school," Donald said.

Curry and Donald agree the class schedule is what made the teacher certification process possible for each of them.

The program at Western Maryland began last June and will end this May, taking the students through one summer session and two full semesters of rigorous study.

"There definitely is dedication in this group," Curry said. "You have to be dedicated because it's challenging, difficult and very rewarding because of that. It's not easy, but it's been worth it."

Donald said he would recommend the program to people interested in teaching at the elementary or high school levels.

He said he intends to teach in Frederick County when he completes the program. Donald currently works as district assistant for U.S. Rep. Beverly B. Byron, D-Md.

The idea for the Teacher's College originated with the Maryland Department of Education's concern about a teacher shortage in the state, prompting a proposal from Western Maryland, Wolfe said.

Applicants to the program are required to have previously earned a bachelor's degree with at least a 2.5 grade point average from an accredited institution.

Secondary education students in the program must have a bachelor's degree in the academic area they hope to teach.

Wolfe and Western Maryland's Education Department chairman Francis "Skip" Fennell are presently reviewing applications for the second Weekend Teacher's College.

VCU theatre group holds open house on Jan. 16

The VUC - COMMUNITY SCHOOL OF THE PERFORMING ARTS' THEATRE WITH CHILDREN FOR CHILDREN will hold an open house on Saturday, Jan 16, from 2 to 4 in the Music Center, 1015 Grove Ave., Theatre Room 208, for new students wishing to sign up for the classes beginning Thursday, Jan. 21. Vienna Boys Choir here Jan. 9

The Carpenter Center for the Performing Arts will present in concert the Vienna Choir Boys, co-presented by the Richmond Symphony, and the VCU Department of Music, Saturday, Jan. 9.

For nearly five centuries the Vienna Choir Boys have enchanted millions with the charm and excellence of their music-making. Each season brings a new choir of boys carrying on a centuries old tradition of music-making at its finest.

The Vienna Choir Boys were founded by imperial decree on July 7, 1948, by the humanist Emperor Maximilian I to fulfill his wish to have choristers in the Imperial Chapel.

Anyone who has seen the choir boys, soon realizes the secret of their fascination: they have managed to combine the nativity of childhood with artistic maturity — something that can only be achieved through serious work.

Since their first tour of the United States in 1932, the Vienna Choir Boys have visited America now fewer than 39 times, have completed nine Asian tours, and have performed an equal number of times in Australia. They also have appeared numerous times in South America.

Teachers wanted

The Baltimore Project for Black Students, under the auspices of the Baltimore Educational Scholarship Trust, is seeking black teachers for positions in Baltimore's independent schools in an effort to diversify teaching staff and faculty in member schools.

State certification is not necessary, but advance degrees and experience are important assets. Resumes are being received at the Baltimore Project for Black Students, 109 W. Melrose Ave., Baltimore, Maryland 21210.

For more information, interested persons may call Mrs. Lorraine Green, 322-8800.

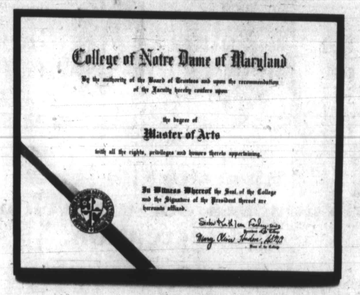
The Spring Continuing Studies Program at the Maryland Institute, College of Art



While others spend weekends resting up, you can spend yours moving up.

A Master's degree in management provides any career-minded person with a keen competitive edge.

Now the College of Notre Dame offers an outstanding graduate program in management that is available when you are—on weekends. It is tailored for women and men who must inspire others to greater levels of achievement–people who know that business leadership is more than a "by the numbers" proposition. It is also the product of effective human skills.

If you are aiming for a leadership role in the private or public sector, this unique weekend opportunity could be an invaluable stepping stone in your career.
