Philip Morris launches Ad campaign

NEW YORK, NY — Philip Morris Magazine launched an advertising campaign which will show the economic contributions of smokers to the U.S. economy.

Guy L. Smith, publisher of the magazine and Philip Morris, USA vice president of corporate affairs, said the print advertising campaign will run in major daily newspapers, minority newspapers, the financial press, and in various industry press.

"This campaign, based on research from the Roper Organization, identifies American smokers as representatives of a cross-section of society with an aggregate household income of $1 trillion," said Smith.

The advertising campaign coincides with release of a reader survey which was conducted this spring. More than 408,000 readers of the periodical for smokers participated in the survey.

"The 60 million American smokers are an important, viable segment of our society. The economic strength of this group either has been overlooked or underrated far too long," commented Smith.

The advertising effort is multi-targeted — designed to reach decision-makers in all industries — finance, heavy industry, restaurants, consumer electronics, advertising, automobile, sports, travel and entertainment.

"We want the automobile manufacturers, for instance, to at least think before taking action that will discriminate against a large segment of their employees, their customers, and their vendors," said Smith. "The time has come when smokers will not sit passively and have their rights trampled."

The campaign was designed by the Corporate Affairs Department of Philip Morris USA, and Reuben M. Smith Associates, a Nashville-based public relations/advertising agency, and in consultation with Circulation Experti and Hispanic Experti, a Hartsdale, New York public relations and consulting organization.

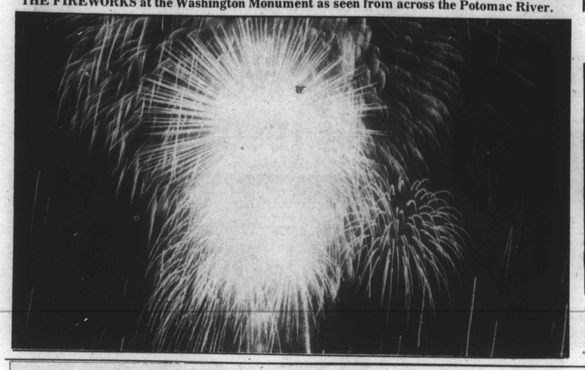
Exhibitions at BMA

Ellsworth Kelly: Works On Paper through July 24; The first major retrospective exhibition devoted exclusively to works on paper by one of America's foremost artists features 161 drawings, watercolors and collages, many of which served as studies for Kelly's paintings and sculptures. Much of the material, from the artist's personal collection, has never been shown publicly.

American Prospects: The Photographs Of Joel Sternfeld through August 21, 75 photographs in luxuriant color of American vistas — small towns, cities, and suburbs. The beauty of Sternfeld's vision first catches the eye before the viewer perceives a twist of irony or hint of foreboding disaster.

Some of these threats are man-made but most are natural catastrophes like flash floods or tornadoes. In counterpoint to his message that there is trouble in paradise, Sternfeld pays homage to the quiet beauty of farmland, deserts, and the individuals encountered on his travels. Organized by the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston. Open June 28.

THE FIREWORKS at the Washington Monument as seen from across the Potomac River.



THESE TWO BOATERS were among the many who not enjoy cruising the Potomac during the July 4th weekend but stayed put so they would have a ring side seat for the fireworks display.

MICHELLE ROACH clutches the huge rocket full of fireworks purchased by her father, Michael Roach (right). The Roaches were among the many District residents taking part in celebrations around the city, whether it was attending the fireworks display downtown or purchase fireworks for their own pleasure.

How the Lyons twins engineer their own reality.

Early on Mamie Lyons taught her twins, Vincent and Elliot, a very important lesson: Life only gives you what you have the courage to demand. So they demanded excellence.

And they got it, from themselves and from others. That's why they were able to graduate from a small town high school in Wynne, Arkansas to a full scholarship in engineering at Southern University, in Baton Rouge, LA. It's also why General Motors is paying for that scholarship and providing them with challenging summer jobs through the GM internship program.

Looking toward the future, General Motors has made a commitment to community development. It's the reason we invest in promising young people like Vincent and Elliot by establishing scholarships at minority colleges and universities across the country. It's also the reason why we have 12.3 billion dollars in property damage insurance managed by minority insurance brokers.

At General Motors we realize that standing behind the people who buy our Chevrolets, Pontiacs, Oldsmobiles, Buicks, Cadillacs and GMC Trucks is more than just a corporate responsibility—it's good business.
