Gun ban law advocates fight back!

By Alicia Benjamin
AFRO Staff Writer

The Maryland Committee Against the Gun Ban has deluged newspapers and radio stations in Maryland with advertisements, denouncing the newly signed law which bans the sale of Saturday Night Specials.

The group's counter organization, Marylanders Against Saturday Night Specials, says the advertisements are deceptive because they state the bill would ban all handguns.

But MCAGB spokespeson, Dick Minard, says the advertisements simply say the law can possibly ban all handguns because the words "Saturday Night Special" or "cheap handguns" are not included in the legislation.

The law establishes a nine-member board which will determine what guns will be legal for sale in the state.

Del. Ralph Hughes, D-40 introduced the legislation during this year's legislative session and it was strongly opposed by the National Rifle Association.

Gov. William Donald Schaefer serves as honorary chairman of the anti-Saturday Night Special group and Hughes is the actual chairman.

The Gun Ban group collected the necessary signatures to carry the law to referendum in November.

According to Minard, his group which includes 12 organizations such as the National Rifle Association, has spent $20 thousand thus far on newspaper ads and an undisclosed amount on radio ads.

The pro gun ban group held a press conference July 11 to counteract the anti gun ban group's advertisements.

"I think our press conference negated any effect they would have had," said Vincent DeMarco, spokesman for the Hughes' group and former assistant attorney general.

"Their ad says the bill would ban all handguns but that's not true," DeMarco said.

"They say this isn't a proper way to deal with crime, but the police say it is," he continued.

Members of Maryland's law enforcement community including State's Attorney Stuart Simms, Elmer Tippett, Superintendent of the State Police, and Cornelius Behan, Baltimore County Police Chief all attended the press conference in support of the law.

"Based upon a federal government study, we estimate that over 100 Marylanders a year are killing with Saturday Night Specials," said Tippett during the press conference.

"We also know from experience and testing that these low-quality handguns cannot be used for legitimate purposes," Tippett continued.

Simms said the State's Attorney's Association supports the law because it bans Saturday Night Specials and non-detectable handguns.

"As someone who works in a building protected by metal detectors, I know the importance of banning non-detectable handguns," Simms stated.

Behan said the recent advertisements by the anti-gun ban group misrepresent the law proposed by Hughes.

The advertisements state that the nine-member board is not obligated to place any guns on the roster of guns that can be sold in the state.

But Behan said the statute states that the new board, "shall" create a roster of permitted handguns which are useful for legitimate purposes.

"The board will only be authorized to keep off that roster, and therefore ban Saturday Night Specials and non-detectable handguns, weapons which are only of use to criminals," Behan said.

The pro gun committee has not yet sponsored television advertisements in the state but when asked if they planned to do so, Minard said, "we'll see as time goes by."

Howard library to close

The Howard County Central Library, 10375 Little Patuxent Parkway in Columbia, will be closed to the public from Wednesday, August 17 until Tuesday, September 6, for the replacement of carpeting throughout the public areas of the Central Library.

Library users should be aware that some library services might be affected by preparations for this work.

Between July and August 17, the availability of books and magazines at the Central Library will slowly diminish as the staff begins removing and packing the 250,000 items on the shelves.

During this period, every possible effort will be made to obtain needed items from the Miller Branch, community libraries, and through inter-library loan.

To help users while the Central Library is closed, the loan period on most items checked out from the Central Library or Miller Branch between July 26 and August 16, will be extended to eight weeks, with the exception of videocassettes.

This means you can borrow most materials for more than double the normal three week period, with no due dates until September.

Child welfare

Over the past several years, the news media, especially the press, has focused a great deal of attention on the "state of the family" and the ever increasing problem of child abuse and neglect. Although the media certainly has a right and an obligation to air such matters in the public forum, much in these stories and articles have pointed a negative finger at agencies and social services officials.

It almost seems, through the eyes and voice of the media, that the social service agencies, officials and staff created the child welfare problem and contribute to the breakdown in family life that we are experiencing today.

I believe it is time for the other side to be heard — that, in fact, social service agencies did not create what is a very real community problem and is a community responsibility to resolve. Shifting blame, looking for scapegoats does little to create a constructive forum in which to debate the very complex issue inherent in this community problem. It deserves a "view from the other side" and an in-depth discussion of the issues by all sides.

By George G. Musgrove
Director
Department of Social Services

The City of Baltimore has had to confront the horrors of child abuse over the last several years. The media has done a commendable job of pointing out the failures in the social services system but, it has not offered an in-depth look at the factors that cause child abuse nor the availability of resources to address this problem.

A large unresolved question in the field of child protective services is whether or not the sharp increase in reports of child abuse are the result of an increase in violence toward children or of the public's willingness to report that violence. The numbers of reports of abuse and neglect in Baltimore City rose from 3,910 in 1980 to 6,177 in 1987. This represents an increase of 58 percent.

The figures for sexual abuse are even more frightening, showing a 237 percent increase since 1980. A statistic that may be even more telling is the approximate 20 percent rise in the number of reports that followed a case widely reported by the media that resulted in a death.

It is fairly obvious that maltreatment did not rise because of the media reports. The willingness to report maltreatment did rise. There seems to have been an absolute increase in the occurrence of child abuse; but, reporting its occurrence is still driven by the community's sensitivity to abuse, especially the horror of a child's death.

What becomes apparent is that we as a community have not set a clear and consistent standard for acceptable levels of child care and parenting. The standard instead drifts on the basis of increased education and public sensitivity to this problem. The lack of a clear standard creates many problems for the community of agencies charged with protecting children.

How many readers have witnessed a misbehaving child get slapped or violently jerked? How many of you have wished that a mother would "shut up" a loudly crying baby? How many of you believe that to spare the rod is to spoil the child? How many of you have used that rod, or that belt, or other objects to discipline a child?

How many of you think that parents who drink or use drugs should not be allowed to have or raise children? How many of you believe that children should not be brought up in a rat and roach infected environment? How many of you realize the level of stress and emotional instability that are caused by poverty, illiteracy, unemployment and homelessness? We know that between 1978 and 1986 the number of children living in poverty increased by 26 percent.

Could you set a standard for child care? As a taxpayer are you willing to be taxed to see that all children live in an environment where that standard is met? Would you support a group facility for abused children in your neighborhood?

How do we begin to define terms such as "at risk," "imminent danger" or "life threatening." Don't they all apply, in some way, to children growing up in poverty in an urban environment? When the family of a child becomes the greatest threat to that child can we really protect that child? Until we can insure the health of families, will we as a community ever be able to guarantee the welfare of our children?

Creating a community of healthy families is an ideal goal; but, it is a goal we are far from attaining. What responsibility do we have to children until that goal is met?

The public has a right to know what to expect and to hold public officials accountable. The question remains to be answered, accountable for what?
