OBITUARIES

Norman Earle Jones

Funeral services for Norman Earle Jones were held on Saturday, November 12, at First Baptist Church.

Known as "Bunky," Jones was born on May 2, 1931 in Baltimore where he was reared and educated and he died Monday November 7, as a result of a massive hemorrhage suffered during treatment of a minor condition.

Jones was not a member of any particular religous assembly, but it is believed that a love for God did abide in his heart. The evidence of his faith was manifested in his love and care for humanity particularly the elderly and the children.

No distance was too far to go to lend a helping hand or kindness too great to spend on stray and sick animals. He loved life and he lived it fully.

The pride of his life was being able to say "I am a stevedore" which was the fulfillment of a lifelong dream.

After a massive layoff Jones went to work as a member of the security force for the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers where he worked until he became disabled. He then moved into the McCulloh Homes where he became a member of the security force.

Norman Earle Jones will be sorely missed by his devoted niece, Elaine M. Davis and brother-in-law, Alvin S. Steele,and faithful friend, the Rev. Christine Gilyard of New York.

Two aunts who were especially close to Jones were his "Aunt Belle," Sybilla Bunn and Lillian Murdock.

Bunky's friends and neighbors in the McCulloh Homes and the Mount-Fayette-Gilmor area will sorely miss his jovial mood.

Other relatives include stepmother, Bonnie P. Dorsey; stepson William P. Mayo; and sister Laura Padilla; three devoted cousins who have always been in his corner Mary H. Hines, Rebecca Fowlkes, and Sandra Yorkshire.

Especially fond memories of him will be forever treasured by his sister, Gertrude Steele.

Memorial to A. Philip Randolph

BOSTON — A bronze statue of black labor and civil rights leader A. Philip Randolph has been installed in Boston's new Back Bay Station.

The Statue, created by New York artist Tina Allen was unveiled at a private ceremony attended by more than 100 dignitaries and community residents.

In attendance was Norman Hill, executive director of New York's A. Philip Randolph Institute.

Allen's seated figure is one-and-one-half life size. The sculpture rests on an engraved black granite base, 8 feet in diameter.

Allen was selected to create the memorial following a national artist search and selection process that involved both art professionals and area residents.

The $85,000 sculpture project was funded by the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority and administered by UrbanArts, Inc., a Boston-based non-profit public art group.

Randolph, who died in 1979 at age 90, was the founding president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, the first black trade union in the United States.

The founder of the Negro American Labor Council and the first black to be named vice president of the AFL-CIO executive council.

Randolph also is credited with securing executive orders from Presidents Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman that banned discrimination in the armed forces and federal employment.

"The A. Philip Randolph memorial is intended to preserve for future generations of Americans a sense of the contribution one individual can make to a complex and sometimes impersonal system," says Allen.

An $85,000 memorial sculpture of black labor and civil rights leader A. Philip Randolph commissioned by the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority (MBTA) recently was unveiled at the MBTA's Back Bay Station. Pictured, at the unveiling ceremony, artist Tina Allen stands beside the memorial sculpture she created.
