SIMPLY SENSATIONAL — Some of the designs featured by African Eye.

Sisters create international style in exclusive design studio

By Adia McDuffy
AFRO Intern

Just as the lens of a camera focuses on whatever is in sight, so does African Eye, Inc., a thriving designer studio and shop in northwest Washington, DC. owned and operated by three attractive young sisters.

The studio features a line of women's wear that includes a blend of African, Asian and European clothing which are the fashions of the 90s, according to Shirley Michael, vice-president and manager of the company.

The business was the creation of Mrs. Michael and her sisters, Mozella Perry Ademiluyi and Katherine Perry. It was originally run from home, where the three sold photos of people and scenery from the east African country of Kenya.

In 1986, they sponsored a showing of their first line of fashions created by African designers, aptly titled, "Visions of Africa — Haute Couture de l'Afrique," which they staged at a downtown Washington hotel.

Three years later, in October, 1989, the sisters feeling ready to expand, opened The African Eye, Inc. Designer Studio in the exclusive Georgetown area of the city.

They believe in hospitality and have a sitting area in the back of the shop where customers can relax and take a break. Regulars often get treated to a cup of tea or coffee and can sit back and enjoy music playing softly in the background.

"Our customers include all types of people and the clothing is geared towards professional women with incomes of $25,000 and above," Mrs. Michael said.

Although they did not encounter any major problems when starting their business, according to Mrs. Michael, "as a Black business, it. is always more difficult to get started."

However, the resilient sisters said, "we did not let that stand in our way."

According to the sisters, the success of the African Eye collection lies in the fact that its clothing "appeals to people from different backgrounds and has an international appeal."

They attribute their knowledge of international styles to the extensive world travel and the fact that they were educated in Uganda, Kenya and Nigeria.

The experience, they said gave them first-hand exposure to the major cultures of the world and implanted in them "a deep appreciation for cross-cultural interaction."

The sisters are planning major changes at the shop, with an expansion to include decor items and art.

Gentlemen too will be able to benefit from the rich styles of African Eye, with a new line in men's clothing planned for the summer in the current shop and others planned in the metropolitan area.

The African Eye Collection has clothes priced from $45 for an Okenne shawl to $500 for an evening ensemble.

Marbury to head CPB TV fund

Donald L. Marbury has been promoted to director of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting's (CPB) $45 million Television Program Fund.

Mr. Marbury was formerly associate director of cultural and children's programs, for the Television Program Fund.

In his new position, he will be responsible for managing funds for major series like 'Wonderworks', 'Great Performances' and 'Frontline'; Open Solicitation program funding; the minority programming initiative; the minority programming initiative; the Public Television Program Challenge Fund; and The Independent Television Service.

"Don's long experience in public broadcasting and his creative energies will be a great asset to CPB's Television Program Fund in the coming years as it assumes an enhanced role in program development," said Gene Katt, vice president, Programming.

Mr. Marbury joined CPB in 1980. As Associate Director for cultural and children's programs, he has played a leading role in the development of several series.

Prior to joining CPB, Mr. Marbury worked at WQED-TV in Pittsburgh, in a variety of producing and reporting positions, including executive producer of local programming. He also spent several years as a general assignment reporter for The Pittsburgh Post Gazette.

In 1970, he became the second Black editor of the University of Pittsburgh's campus newspaper, "The Pitt News." The first editor, Robert L. Vann (1906), founded the Pittsburgh Courier in 1910.

Mr. Marbury, who has received national awards for producing and writing, has taught communications technology, screenwriting and television production at several colleges. He holds a BA in English from the University of Pittsburgh.

He lives in Gaithersburg, Md. with his wife and two children.
