SPORTS

John Thompson: a lesson in loyalty, values

Sam Lacy

In 1972, as the college basketball season was in its beginning stages, banners were hanging over the windows blotting out the Washington sunlight from McDonogh Gymnasium.

Slogans which ran the gamut of racist sleeze, were inscribed on each: "Go back where you belong, n. . . r" read one. "Get lost, blackbird," said another.

"If you know what's good for you, you'll forget this job," read still another. Then came the coup de grace: "Go, nobody likes dead crow."

Now, McDonogh Gymnasium, 18 years ago was the site of Georgetown University's basketball games which had been a disgrace to the institution for nearly two decades.

The malicious messages symbolized the attitude, and underwrote the welcome being extended the incoming coach.

He was John Thompson.

The horde of predominately White neighborhood fans, a majority of the White faculty and student body and, perhaps, Washington in general were hard-pressed to accept the incursion of a Black high school coach into the athletic life of prestigious Georgetown University.

But the school's Jesuit fathers stuck by John Thompson and their decision to hire him.

Tensions eased somewhat when the Georgetown Hoyas began turning around what had been a perennial losing situation and were beginning to become a viable contender in college basketball.

Within 10 years from his arrival under extremely stressful conditions, John Thompson built Georgetown into a national power in basketball.

The Jesuit fathers were still with him, quietly — not adamantly — proud of him and his achievements.

Other colleges dropped subtle lures before his eyes. Then came the pros who wanted him — Boston, San Antonio, Houston and now Denver.

Only in the last instance did John Thompson hesitate before quietly rejecting the kind of money that would guarantee lifelong security for his family and himself.

Perceiving John Thompson as a man of intense loyalty, one might easily understand why he refuses to leave what he considers to be unfinished business with the Jesuits who trusted him when he was caught in the fire of racism.

His action last Friday proved that no amount of money could cause him to betray that trust. It also delivered a message to the Jesuits and to all the young men who have played under him: that his sense of values are exactly the same as are those he has tried for 18 years to instill in them.

John Thompson's statement at the time he announced his decision to remain at Georgetown: "I am a teacher."

In the pro job he was offered, he would have no one to educate.

He would have no young people to guide and protect.

He'd have no hopeless kids to whom he could provide the help and inspiration needed to complete their education — kids who believed in him when he recruited them as marginal students and with no certain way of entering college.

He infuriated thousands of television viewers and basketball folk when he walked out early last year to begin a 2-game boycott, many regarding the move as "showboating."

Those who railed at him, however, failed to comprehend that this was a characteristic John Thompson statement on behalf of young athletes, Black and White.

That this was his way of telling the world that certain academic guidelines imposed by the NCAA were victimizing the very kids who needed adult help in avoiding the pitfalls of an uneducated society.

John Thompson's loyalty and values make him a man loved by a few, liked by many and hated by others.

But respected by all.

OVERVIEW

IN GOOD HANDS — The insurance commercial that claims "You're in good hands," aptly describes the condition of the United States in women's basketball for the upcoming Good will Games.

On hand in Colorado Springs are the likes of former gold medal Olympians Teresa Edwards, Lynette Woodard, Vicky Bullett, Cynthia Cooper and Katrina McClain, along with current All-Americans, Jennifer Azzi of Stanford, Medina Dixon of Old Dominion and Carolyn Jones of Auburn.

KURT KOLLARED — Wes Unseld's second annual Adult Fantasy Basketball Camp will feature local celebrities Baltimore Mayor Kurt Schmoke and Bill Demby, a part-time counselor with the Howard County "disAbility Awareness Project," as fantasy campers.

The basketball camp will be held July 8-11 at Gettysburg College in Gettysburg, Pa. Applications are still being accepted, but space is limited.

Schmoke, 40, will attend the camp on Monday, July 9. A former football and lacrosse player at Yale University and Baltimore City College, Schmoke won the top scholar-athlete award as a high school senior.

SWINGS BUT NO WINGS — A major reason the 1990 Orioles are not flying as they did in 1989:

Through last weekend, the "power portion" of the batting order — No. 3 through No. 7 — had struck out 204 times in 70 games.

Mickey Tettleton 79, Craig Worthington 55, Randy Milligan 46, and Cal Ripken 24.

* * *

MEAN MILK MESSAGE — Cal Ripken Jr. has taken many futile cuts at the ball in crucial moments for the Orioles this season.

But the unkindest cut of all occurred last Wednesday night in Cleveland when for the 13th time in 14 opportunities, he flopped with the bases loaded to end the inning.

The Milk Producers Association's commercial was next on the TV screen. It showed cars being rushed to clear the streets behind a Little League fence, blinds on houses being hastily closed to protect neighborhood windows and opposing outfielders backing up to the fence, all screaming:

"Cal's coming up!"

JUST A THOUGHT — It isn't what usually appears here, but it may be worth a question: If the flag-burners are ignored, won't they just go away?

IMPOSSIBLE TO IMPROBABLE — Paul Louis (R) and the Cameroon team led by Roger Milla (featured) in last week's AFRO) moved up from what World Cup soccer observers considered an impossible task last weekend. They defeated Colombia, 2-1, in overtime to reach the quarter-finals for the first time ever by an African soccer team. At the tournament's opening Cameroon was listed at 400-1 odds.

Serious soccer

CAIRO, Egypt — A 40-year-old soccer fan hanged himself Friday because Egypt was eliminated by England from the World Cup.

Siyyed abdel Aal, a civil servant, wrote a note that was found near his body.

"My life was over the minute that the Egypt-England match was over and the Egyptian national soccer team eliminated from the World Cup finals," the note said. "I wish the Egyptian team better luck in the 1994 World Cup."

If you think this is new to soccer, especially World Cup soccer, you are sadly mistaken.

In 1978, a French housewife, Claudi Trichard killed her husband with a shotgun when he watched the matches on TV rather than help her shell peas in their kitchen.

On another occasion, a man threw himself from the second-floor window of his Berlin home shouting "I don't want to live anymore," after West Germany lost to Austria, 3-2.

And on that same evening, a nun from the Merciful Sisters Order strangled a man who cheered the Austrian victory in a Paris Cafe.

Suns to land of Rising Sun

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Phoenix Suns and Utah Jazz will open the 1990-91 NBA season with two games in Tokyo Nov. 3-4, marking the first time an American sports league will play regular season games outside North America.

The games will be played in the afternoon at the Tokyo Metropolitan Gymnasium and televised live in primetime in the United States.

"We are very pleased to announce this milestone event, involving regular season contests played abroad," NBA Commissioner David Stern said Monday.

The Suns are playing in the Western Conference finals against Portland, after eliminating the Jazz in the opening round of the playoffs.

The NBA has staged exhibitions in foreign countries, including a 1988 Soviet tour by the Atlanta Hawks and the annual McDonald's Open which matches NBA teams against premier international clubs.

New Bison coach sets aim

Alfred "Butch" Beard, an assistant coach with the New Jersey Nets and a 10-year NBA veteran, was named men's basketball coach at Howard University Wednesday.

Beard, 42, has been in the NBA as a player, assistant coach and color commentator for the past 21 years, but has never been a head coach at any level.

"I expect the Howard University basketball program to be a power," said Beard, who recently completed his second year as a Nets' assistant. "The only way that's going to work is I have to go out and recruit student-athletes who not only want to be students first, but who want to play good basketball, hard basketball and winning basketball."

Beard replaces A. B. Williamson, who was fired in April after an 8-20 season

Next up for George

George Foreman, fresh off his second-round KO of Adilson Rodrigues, has lined up Ken Lukusta. He expects to sign today for the July 31 Edmonton fight against the Canadian brawler. Lukusta (19-16) has lost seven of his last 11 fights.

Roy has relapse

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Hall of Famer Roy Campanella has been hospitalized since late last week because of respiratory difficulties, the Los Angeles Dodgers announced Monday.

The former Brooklyn Dodgers catcher, who is partially paralyzed from a 1958 automobile accident, will be undergoing a series of tests at Northridge Hospital Medical Center, the club said.

Campanella, 68, spent the first three months of this year at the hospital because of complications from diabetes. He was released just before Opening Day.

Campanella, who began his career with Brooklyn in 1946, serves as a catching instructor during spring training. He has made numerous appearances for the Dodgers as a member of the club's community relations team.

Black all-star college team romps in Europe

REIMS, France — Two U.S. All-Star teams touring under the banner of World Unlimited, Ltd., scored a sweep of two French teams here Wednesday, running their record on the tour to 6 and 2.

In the opening contest here at the Sports Complex, the U.S. All Stars "Team A," ripped off their fifth successive win without a defeat, rolling past the French National team 104-70. The U.S. all-stars "Team B," in the second half of the twinbill, edged the Reims Champagne basketball club, 120-116 their third win in five games.

The U.S. All-Stars "Team A," composed primarily of players from historically Black colleges and universities, continued their outstanding play, in their third win on the tour over the French Nationals. Paced by Georgetown's Sam Jefferson and Norfolk State's Rich McLean, the Black Americans, playing for the first time ever outside of the U.S., unleashed their speed and quickness on the taller French National early in the contest, opening up a 27-18 lead with 11:09 to play in the first 20 minutes.

Powering the ball down inside to Jefferson and Frank Sillmon (Alabama A&M) in the game's opening minutes, the U.S. team with Jeff Hayes (North Carolina Central) and Matt Yates (Norfolk State) at the controls, just ran away from the French. Up by 14 points at the half, 50-36, Charles Christian resorted to the outside and McLean, a 6-8 forward, went in motion, pumping in four 3-pointers from long range.

OLD AND THE NEW — Longtime AFRO Sports Editor Sam Lacy (L) has a smiling welcome to the newest staff member, Will Marshall. The youngster will handle area sports for the paper.
