Super?

Sunday's Super Bowl is tougher to call than the six-to-seven-point spread being proposed by the professional oddsmakers, in favor of San Francisco .... The opposing Cincinnati eleven will not be so easily squelched.

In summary, it seems at this desk that these teams are so closely matched that already they have etched in the turf at Joe Robbie Stadium a huge super question-mark.

Admitted, the 49ers have a brilliant attack potential in quarterback Joe Montana throwing to wideout Jerry Rice, and at opportune moments handing off to running back Roger Craig .... But the feeling here is that the key to San Francisco's success is fullback Tom Rathman .... The Bengal defense simply must stop him.

One more hurdle?

Cincinnati, however, is emotionally geared for a tremendous final game effort .... The Bengals have faced adversity for nearly two years and have endured .... Winners of only four games in 1987, their coach, Sam Wyche, virtually hanged in effigy, their quarterback Boomer Esiason and the team itself booed unmercifully, and a poll being publicized claiming 62 percent of Cincinnati in favor of scrubbing the franchise from general manager-owner Paul Brown down to the field markers.

Suddenly, everyone acted in concert ..... Behind the patience of Paul Brown, the daring leadership of Esiason and the aggressive, devil-may-care running of Ickey Woods, the Bengals charged back.

Only to smile at another hurdle: the underdog role in Miami Sunday.

Remember Motley?

At this point, it may be appropriate to suspect that there are some old sentimentalists who remember Paul Brown .... The Cincinnati owner holds a special place in the hearts of some along with Branch Rickey, the revered baseball man who opened the doors to the so-called national pastime.

It was Brown's courageous hiring of Marion Motley, Bobby Mitchell, Emerson Cole, Jim Brown, Bill Bell and punter (yes, punter) Horace Gillom when he was at Cleveland that pried open the white-paneled doors for the influx which later followed.

No Wyche genius

That done, I shall now let you in on an unique bit of irony .... Jerry Rice is the ace of the 49er receiving corps .... Sam Wyche is the coach of the Cincinnati Bengals .... Wyche, until a controversial ruling from the commissioner's office, was using a hurry up, no-huddle offense with great success.

The hurry up, no-huddle offense was not the brainchild of Sam Wyche as generally believed .... Instead it was introduced by Jerry Rice's old college coach, Ken Pettiford at Mississippi Valley State in 1984, and with it he shocked southwest football.

Getting scientific

Back to the game? .... Okay.

Here we have undeniable talent in San Francisco, and undeterred dedication in Cincinnati .... Matchups of this kind inspire such phrases as the "irresistible force vs. the immovable object."

With that in mind, I'll ignore the crystal ball, computers and oddsmakers and pull out the one scientific devise I know: the coin toss .... So here goes .... Heads it's the 49ers, tails it's the Bengals.

Tails.

Notable quotable

Cincinnati Mayor Charles Luken:

"Whereas Boomer Esiason is the best quarterback in the National Football League and Joe Montana is not, and whereas, I don't think any self-respecting Cincinnatian will want to drive on a street bearing the same name as the San Francisco quarterback, now be it proclaimed that the name Montana Avenue be unofficially changed until after the Super Bowl to Esiason Street."

★★★★★NFL Hall of fame nominees★★★★★

FOUR OF EIGHT — Among players established as finalists in voting for the Pro Football Hall of Fame are eight shown here. Four of the eight are John Mackey, who starred at tight end for the Baltimore Colts from 1963-71; Art Shell, an outstanding tackle for the Oakland Raiders, 1968-81; Leroy Kelly, who took up the fullback role vacated by Jim Brown at Cleveland, 1964-73, and Mel Blount, a bruising cornerback for the Pittsburgh Steelers, 1970-83. Shell played college ball at Maryland, Eastern Shore; Kelly is an alumnus of Morgan State.

THE OTHER FOURSOME — Also nominated for the final selection ceremony at Miami on Sunday, are Lynn Swann, graceful, acrobatic wide receiver of the Pittsburgh Steelers, 1974-82; Buck Buchanan, talented tackle for the Kansas City Chiefs, 1963-75; Willie Wood, versatile, hard-hitting safety for the Green Bay Packers, 1960-71, and Carl Eller, a member of famed "Purple People Eaters" defense of Minnesota Vikings, 1964-78.

Plaudits for coach and Stanford

By Sam Lacy

Dennis Green, upon being named the head football coach at Stanford, said last week that he has no further interest in becoming a head coach in the National Football League.

The AFRO applauds him for that.

Green will quit his job as assistant coach with the San Francisco 49ers, immediately the clock tolls the end of the Super Bowl on Sunday evening.

This week he is tutoring the 49ers' receivers — including the talented Jerry Rice — for San Francisco's meeting with the Cincinnati Bengals in Miami.

Once that role is concluded, he will head for California to take over the post left vacant by Stanford's firing of longtime head man Jack Elway.

At Stanford, Green will become the first black head coach at a Pacific Athletic Conference school. Earlier, he had been the first black to lead a Big 10 team; that was at Northwestern from 1981-85.

He was named Big 10 Coach of the Year in 1982 after he turned around a Wildcat program which had lost 34 games in a row and produced a 3-8 record.

Stanford's offer and Green's acceptance occurred at a time when he was (reportedly) being considered by two NFL teams, notably the Los Angeles Raiders.

When he gleefully accepted the Stanford offer, Green showed that he was a smart man making a smart move.

Head coaching jobs in the NFL are purely glamour positions, glorified by remarks such as being "one of only 28 men deemed good enough" for such loftiness.

A head coaching job in a major college is rewarding to the extent that a contribution is made to a young person's maturity, educationally as well as athletically.

Treated right it can be a lifetime assignment, whereas the NFL is a here-today-gone-tomorrow probability.

Dennis Green smart man, smart move

Said Green: "I've interviewed for jobs in the NFL. That part of my future is over. That is no longer a goal for me."

On his coaching philosophy, Green said he believes "in the student athlete, and Stanford's tradition in that area."

He said that when he was with the 49ers and their headquarters were in nearby Redwood City, "I never took my eyes off Stanford."

Green, with the 49ers since 1986, was a Stanford assistant in 1977-78, both bowl seasons under Walsh, and was the Cardinals' offensive coordinator in 1980 when the team finished 6-5 under Paul Wiggin.

Stanford Athletic Director Andy Geiger told reporters that Green "possesses outstanding experience, both on the collegiate and professional level.

"It was clear that he was prepared to lead this Stanford football team."

Green and Minnesota Vikings defensive backs coach Pete Carroll were the only two candidates interviewed twice by Stanford as it looked for Elway's repiacement.

As a player Dennis was a starting Iowa tailback and later played in the Canadian Football League.

John and the iceberg

Webster's dictionary describes an iceberg: "a huge floating mass of ice, detached from a glacier."

The description fitsperfectly the continuing saga of college athletics as the 60th birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. was being observed last weekend.

The glacier of racism persists in major colleges despite the more frequent indications of opportunity being offered black youngsters to star on the field of play.

But, Georgetown coach John Thompson last week uncovered the hyprocrisy with his walkout at the basketball game between his team and Pittsburgh at the Capital Centre.

He attacked a new NCAA ruling that would deny freshman student-athletes access to money to enter college without facing more rigid academic conditions than previously required.

Thompson admits he doesn't feel the 700 SAT and/or the 2.2-point grade average is too tough for a youngster to attain. So, it must be that he senses the real motives behind the controversial change. This even though he declares his concern is not based on race.

Supporters of the tougher standards include Notre Dame and Penn State, both of which draw the cream of talent among high school prospects, black and white.

So, the Irish and the Nittany Lions are not actually affected by a rule that strikes hardest at financially deprived young people.

But the more vocal advocacy comes from the Southeast Conference. In fact, it is the SEC that introduced the legislation and pressed the NCAA for a second ballot after its initial proposal had been rejected.

Why? The AFRO view:

The growing image of blacks in the conference (six black quarterbacks, four all-black basketball teams, '77 percent of non-white track stars, etc.) has struck hard at the Dixie conscience.

Something must be done to halt the melting .... SAM LACY.
