Item II

The coin toss last week came up "tails" giving the column's effort to pick the Super Bowl winner to Cincinnati . . . . The flip should have been "heads," since it was that side of the penny that was assigned San Francisco and it was San Francisco that won.

All of which proves that, no matter the method, I can foul up predictions.

That bit of business disposed of, let me move to Item II on the sports agenda of recent weeks: Georgetown basketball coach John Thompson's quarrel with the NCAA over the latter's proposed strengthening of eligibility requirements for incoming freshman student-athletes.

Proposition 48 and the newly adopted Proposal 42, have been widely discussed by the entire nation's media, so it shouldn't be necessary to detail their demands here . . . . Except to say that athletic scholarship money would be denied youngsters who failed to reach certain levels of classroom performance in their senior years of high school.

Access needed

The NCAA and its member colleges have been wrestling with the matter of eligibility for 15 years, and charges of unscrupulous recruiting practices have been lodged against first one school then another for an even longer time.

The predictions — or nuances of Item I — are part of a lighter moment at this desk . . . . Item II remains a fixture in a more serious mood, because at stake is the future of our young people, black and white.

They desperately need access to an education . . . . and rescue from life in the crime-ridden streets!

Better sophomores

And it is most disturbing that our educators out of apparent greed — a greed nurtured by a selfish desire to win games — refuse to consider reinstatement of the "freshman rule" . . . . The "freshman rule" — abandoned 15-20 years ago for the same selfish reason — banned first-year students from varsity athletics.

The restoration of such a ban inevitably would produce better sophomores because there would be:

(1) relief from the pressures faced by young people in trying to adjust to college life; (2) there'd also be an understanding that the incoming athlete must prove himself in the classroom if he wants to preserve his scholarship;

(3) he/she would do this by hitting the books without the distractions of practicing, remembering plays, etc.

Damper on coaches

The solution, it seems, would be to let a deserving prospect into the college of his choice on condition — the condition being that any aid given him/her would be withdrawn if the academic grades fell short of the accepted level . . . . If he/she flunks as a freshman, there would be no sophomore athletics.

Such an arrangement also would put a stop to the practice of coaches snatching up kids who have no real academic promise, but who can become stars on the playing field for use as long as they (the coaches) can manipulate their eligibility.

With it made clear that a youngster will have to prove himself for a year before he can be played, the unscrupulous coach will be reluctant to recruit and embrace an Item II question-mark.

Notable quotable

Los Angeles Lakers All-Pro guard Magic Johnson when asked to describe his consistent performance: "I only know how to play two ways, and that's reckless and abandon."

YEP, THAT'S RIGHT — For Jerry Rice and the San Francisco 49ers, everything was OK, hunky dory, super super and what-have-you Sunday night. Especially for Rice who set Super Bowl records in catching forward passes and yards gained as the 49ers edged the Cincinnati Bengals, 20-16, at Miami.

Winfield Foundation foes OK arbitration

NEW YORK (UPI) — Attorneys for New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner and slugger Dave Winfield have agreed to go to arbitration to settle their dispute over money allegedly due the Winfield Foundation.

The New York Daily News reported Tuesday that the two sides had agreed to submit their cases to Michael Armstrong, a New York attorney who rose to prominence as counsel for the Knapp Commission.

Winfield filed suit Jan. 6 against Steinbrenner, accusing the Yankees owner of reneging on a 1980 pledge to pay $3 million to the Winfield Foundation over a 10-year period. The slugger claimed Steinbrenner had not made quarterly payments to the foundation since Sept. 1987 and owed some $450,000.

Steinbrenner filed a countersuit Jan. 9, asking the charity be placed in receivership because its funds were routinely used for the personal expenses of Winfield. That lawsuit also asked that Winfield pay some $380,000 he allegedly owes the foundation under the 1980 agreement.

Steinbrenner said the disputed money has been placed in an interest-bearing account until the matter is resolved.

The Winfield Foundation is a non-profit organization designed to fight drug abuse and help underprivileged children.

Daily News columnist Mike Lupica submitted a proposal last Wednesday, suggesting the two sides submit their cases for arbitration before Theodore Kheel, a labor mediator for nearly 50 years. But Winfield's attorneys balked, noting Kheel's father is a partner in a law firm that represents Major League Baseball.

Armstrong's name was presented to the two sides on Sunday, and his selection was agreed upon by Monday.

"I'm a New Yorker and a baseball fan, so it would have been impossible for me to say no," Armstrong told the newspaper. "It's unusual matters like these that made me want to be a lawyer in the first place."

African paces Hoyas

Georgetown's African connection, a recruit from Zaire, Monday night took a bite into the longtime glorification of Patrick Ewing and his successor Alonzo Mourning.

Reserve center Dikembe Mutombo set a school record with 12 blocked shots as Georgetown downed St. John's 75-64 in a Big East battle.

With Mutombo rejecting 9 shots in the first half, Georgetown jumped to a 27-10 lead in the opening 13½ minutes of the game, but the Redmen drew within 50-42 midway through the second half. Consecutive blocks by Mutombo keyed a 6-0 run that opened a 56-42 lead, then the Hoyas' survived a barrage of 3-point shots by Matt Brust (26 points, including five 3-pointers) for the victory.

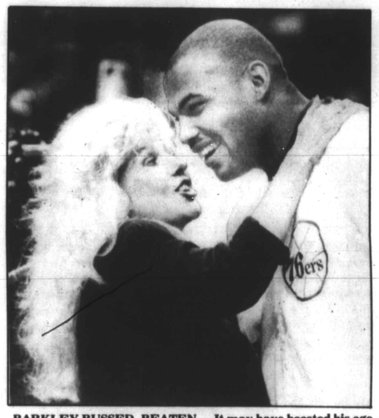
Georgetown's 16 blocked shots also set a school record and was two shy of the NCAA record set by North Carolina in a 1985 game against Stanford.

The previous school single-game block record of 11 was set by freshman Mourning on Dec. 7 against St. Leo. Ewing's best single-game block total was 10. Mutombo's previous season high in blocked shots was 7 on Dec. 10 against Shenandoah.

Mutombo is a 7-foot-1, 230-pound sophomore from Zaire who is playing his first collegiate season. Mutombo did not begin playing basketball until his brother introduced him to the game in 1985, but played on the national team of Zaire.

He attended a Jesuit school in his native land and came to Georgetown in 1987 after a U.S. government employee working in Zaire told Thompson about him, then sat out last season while acclimating himself to this country.

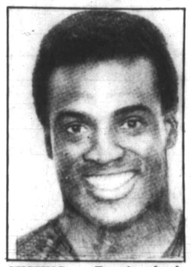
Mutombo, whose playing time resulted from Mourning's foul trouble, played havoc with the St. John's offense, swatting three consecutive shots during one first half possession.



BARKLEY BUSSED, BEATEN — It may have boosted his ego but Philadelphia's All-NBA forward Charles Barkley wasn't helped otherwise when bussed by "Kissing Bandit" Morgana the other evening. Barkley and the 76ers bowed to expansion team Charlotte Hornets, 127-122 later.

Super(latives)

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — A Las Vegas casino owner won a $1 million bet Sunday, possibly the largest single wager in the history of Nevada bookmaking, when the San Francisco 49ers beat the Cincinnati Bengals 20-16 in the Super Bowl.



MISSING — Running back Stanley Wilson of the Super Bowl Cincinnati Bengals, was missing at AFRO press time. When cocaine was found in his hotel room the night before the game, Wilson reportedly sneaked out a back door of the Miami Omni as his suspension was announced, and contacted neither family or team officials over the weekend.

Bob Stupak, owner of Vegas World, placed his bet on Cincinnati at Little Caesars Gambling Casino on the Las Vegas Strip several hours before kickoff. Little Caesars listed the 49ers a 7-point favorite.

Stupak would have lost if the San Francisco 49ers had won by 8 points or more.

Little Caesars' owner Gene Maday said Stupak walked into the establishment, not to be confused with Caesars Palace Hotel, carrying two suitcases filled with cash. Stupak bet $1,050,000 to win $1 million on the Bengals, which means he gets back his original wager plus $1 million.

"To my knowledge this is the largest single legitimate bet ever booked," said Maday. "Oh, yes we had the money to cover it."

Maday said Stupak told him he tried to place the $1 million bet Sunday at several major Las Vegas sports books, but was turned away.

Rice exits Pro Bowl

HONOLULU (UPI) — Jerry Rice, the San Francisco receiver and Super Bowl MVP, and Cincinnati quarterback Boomer Esiason withdrew from Sunday's Pro Bowl because of injuries.

Pro Bowl spokesman Greg Aiello said Monday doctors told Esiason not to play. Esiason said earlier in the week he intended to take part in the Pro Bowl, but a shoulder injury in Sunday's Super Bowl loss to San Francisco prevented him from playing. He will be replaced by Jim Kelly of Buffalo.

Aiello said two other players — Tim Krumrie and Bill Fralic — will miss the game because of injury.

Krumrie of the Bengals, who broke his leg in the Super Bowl, will be replaced by Brian Sochia of Miami. Rice will not play because of an ankle injury. He will be replaced by J.T. Smith of Phoenix.

Fralic, the Atlanta guard, will not play because of knee surgery. He will be replaced by Mark Bortz of the Chicago Bears.

The AFC quarterback will be Warren Moon. The nose tackle will be Fred Smerlas of Buffalo.

The NFC will start Mark May at guard instead of Fralic and Henry Ellard of the Rams to replace Rice.

STRICKEN — Notre Dame defensive back Robert Satterfield suffered seizure and death at a Niles, Mich. nightclub last week. One of the stars in the Irish victory over West Virginia in the national championship game in the Fiesta Bowl, Satterfield had just returned from a White House visit with his Notre Dame teammates.
