DAVID ALAN BUNN:

From the footlights to bright lights

Native entrepreneur to showcase local talent

By Charles H. Brown
AFRO Staff Writer

David Allen Bunn is determined to turn up the wattage on Baltimore talent and has just the vehicle to do it: "Video". A Pygmallion, My Fair Lady, Star is Born type showcase, where a mythical young woman with very real talent is given the star treatment by her "Big Apple" agent.

The play is produced, scored and written by Bunn who has recorded for Columbia Records, scored for the television show, "Spenser for Hire" and is an associate in the offices of New York promoter Luther Henderson, the man who produced the current revivals of Purlie and Ain't Misbehaving.

Putting the production together has travelled the typical path of a business start-up: Idea, cultivation, consultation and on February 25-26 at the Meyerhoff, culmination or consummation if you are from the romantic school.

And all at a cost of "...Its a lot," Bunn said. "That is the best way to say it up to this point."

But the investment is already experiencing its first returns. By booking the play into the Meyerhoff "Video" will make history as the first theatrical piece produced, managed and staffed by blacks.

"We can be proud of that," said Marie Henderson, management and promotional consultant for the production and as president of the Ball for the Arts, Inc., and unofficial undersecretary for the arts in Baltimore. "There are multimillions-millions in this market and we get none of it because we historically are not part of it. "Video" is a first and it's great."

All of the cast and some of the management in this group shot pose in the lobby of the Meyerhoff.

David Allen Bunn is a man who has learned to live as though he belonged.

A confident voice, a relaxed smile and a steady handshake, have taken the West Baltimore bred Bunn to the symphony halls of Boston, to after hour clubs of the "Village" (not Edmondson, Greenwich), the Broadway theater district, and back again to Baltimore's westside.

In fact his confidence once carried him into a Boston party in honor of Quincy Jones - uninvited.

"It was better than reading a book," Bunn said. "He gave me some real pointers that I have been using ever since."

As a talented young man of 26 with pointers, Bunn sought a place to stage "Video" where other talent abounds. So he came back to Baltimore.

"I had offers to stage it in New York, but I always believed in Baltimore talent," Bunn said. "This city has some of the best talent in the world. Trazana is a case in point."

Trazana Beverly, the Tony Award winning star of "Colored Girls" who refers to Baltimore as home-first, last and always, is the director of "Video" and a central figure in the company's management team.

Other members of "Video"'s management team include the musical director Nathan Carter director of the internationally acclaimed of Morgan State University Choir; choreographer Sylvester Campbell Department head of Dance at the School for the Arts hailed as a "black Nureyev"; Sam Wilson director and founder of the Arena Players; executive producer Nick Mosby, owner of Geoffrey's and the Regatta Restaurant; assistant producer Donna Comegys-Purnell; and stage manager Gail Hemphill-Danik.

Not to mention the shows star, Gabriella Bunn-Goodman, Peabody Conservatory graduate, background vocalist with Roberta Flack and lead vocalist on five numbers on the latest Norman Conners album.

The "V" team performs the same function as the management of any business, overseeing the successful execution of the groups stated plans and objectives. In the case of "Video": Broadway.

"We are already talking about a New York run," Bunn said. "People in New York are already talking about it and waiting for the Meyerhoff run."

But before the "Great White Way" comes the great roadway: Touring.

Bunn says before the company can afford the millions of dollars required to mount a Broadway production they will stick to the typical theatrical roadmap of a national tour; followed by either another tour or possibly an off-Broadway run before proceeding on to Broadway.

Then what? Henderson says she is often asked if the group will continue to develop local black talent after "Video".

"I would love to," she replies. "This would be great. One thing Baltimore lacks is some kind of professional cultural team where you can go in regard to handling the whole production."

"To sell it from the idea stage to the Meyerhoff to Broadway is definitely a business," Henderson added. "It took salesmanship to get it together. "Video" was written as a cultural piece with a business purpose."

For Bunn "Video" is a milestone, but life goes on. He has just finished a score for the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra and is currently scoring a film for a Boston production company. And after the Meyerhoff:

"We wouldn't mind having an extended Baltimore run," Bunn said.

David Alan Bunn Gabrielle Bunn-Goodman as the shining star of "Video."

The cast in a full tilt workout.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Collier seeks Minority Health Care Providers

Dr. Maxie T. Collier, Baltimore City Commissioner of Health, announced today that the City Health Department is seeking Minority Business Enterprises/Women's Business Enterprises (MBE/WBE), to provide health care services or fiscal and administrative services to Health Department contractors who are also MBE/WBE.

Types of services the Health Department solicits contracts for include dental care, nutrition counseling, social services and vision and hearing services for infants, children and adolescents; alcoholism and drug abuse counseling; transportation and residential and day programs for the mentally retarded; and medical care for the diagnosis, treatment and follow-up of diseases such as AIDS and tuberculosis.

Interested MBE/WBE health care providers can obtain more information by writing to Julia B. Anderson, Director or Minority Health and Special Initiatives, Baltimore City Health Department, 303 E. Fayette Street, First Floor, Baltimore, Maryland 21202, or call 396-9994. (TDD #396-1846)
