Support hotline

The Department of Human Resources Child Support Enforcement Administration has established an information and referral hotline to address child support issues.

The Child Support Hotline for Parents will serve as a resource for both custodial and non-custodial parents that have questions or need assistance with problems concerning their child support case including court orders, delinquent payments, wage withholding, tax refund and lottery winning interceptions, etc.

"Child support is an issue that affects both parents, but often only the custodial parent has direct access to the Department for information or to receive assistance with problems," said DHR Secretary Ruth Massinga. "The new hotline will provide an open line of communication for all parents."

The Child Support Enforcement Administration provides services to help parents meet the financial needs of their children by securing support from absent parents. Services are provided throughout Maryland and include locating absent parents, establishing paternity, establishing support orders, collecting support payments, and enforcing support orders (wage liens, tax refund interception, lottery winning interception).

Parents in need of assistance or answers to child support questions, should call The Child Support Hotline for Parents at 1-800-332-6347. The TTY number for the hearing impaired is 333-0017.

Religious shows not in danger

The Baltimore Rumor Control Center once again is experiencing an influx of calls pertaining to the validity of petitions being circulated in Baltimore among churches and community associations.

The petitions protest the alleged effort to ban religious programming on radio and television. Rumor Control has noted that this reoccurring rumor, which has been around since the late 1970's, generally resurfaces around the Lenten Season.

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC), has reiterated that it is not considering, nor has it ever considered, a petition by Madalyn Murray O'Hair, or anyone else, to ban religious programming on radio or television.

The Commission emphasized that it is prohibited by the Communications Act of 1934 from censoring broadcast material and by the First Amendment from interfering with freedom of speech in broadcasting.

The Federal Communications Commission noted, however, that in 1975, it unanimously denied a petition by Jeremy D. Lansman and Lorenzo W. Milan asking the agency to, among other things, "freeze" applications by religious institutions for TV or FM channels reserved for educational stations.

Since that time, the Commission has received over 16 million pieces of mail and a corresponding number of telephone calls on the mistaken belief that the Federal Communications Commission was considering a ban on broadcasting religious programming.

Thus, once again in a further attempt to stem the rumors, the Federal Communications Commission is not empowered by any statute to prohibit radio and television stations from presenting religious programming, nor can it direct any broadcaster to present or refrain from presenting announcements or programs on religion.
