—Maggie and the Nu-U

began to include new clothing in her line as a way to motivate the mothers of the kids she had clothed. So what happened next?

"It just snowballed from there," Maggie explains.

Now the clothing is all new and fresh from the designer's palette and Maggie's Place is truly Maggie's Place. Maggie bought the Read St. building after selling the Old Towne Mall site, which makes her the first African-American woman to own property in either of these commercial zones.

Now with the move to hip little Read St., five years ago, Maggie's hasn't lost its soul, it has found its place in the sun.

And it shows throughout the store back to front and beyond.

There must be some kind of invisible hook in front of Maggie's Place, because very few passersby get two feet beyond the display window without being jerked back for a second look.

Then some powerful northeasterly gust of wind blows them right in the front door where some unseen presence jerks their hand out of their pocket and forces it to stroke the variety of fabrics, while an inner force fights to escape from their throat, making weird sounds during the passage. Sort of like this: hmmmm, hmmmm, hmmm.

Then the strange concoction the Addisons spray into the air, possibly a mixture of funky cold something or other, tempered with kickapoo joy juice, turns the entrant into a lifelong customer and friend.

"A lot of times people come back just to talk," said Bill. "So many people drive by and blow their horn," adds Maggie. "Sometimes I just can't see them, but I wave anyway."

"That's from the exposure you get when you provide that level of service. It doesn't put any money in our pocket, but it makes us feel good."

That's what friends are for.

Maggie's Place and the NU-U are both located at 213 W. Read St. in Downtown Baltimore. Tel.:728-5678

Some people come by because they have heard about the dogs.

future, confident in the hope that we will conquer new frontiers and become established as the major African carrier, and one of the top airlines of our ever shrinking world."

New liquor license laws

If you have a liquor license allowing you to serve alcoholic beverages for on-premise consumption, you are affected by a new law that goes into effect July 1, 1989.

Under the legislation, liquor licensees or an employee of the licensee must complete a course in alcohol awareness training. The course must be certified by the state comptroller to meet legal requirements.

The comptroller will certify course materials beginning July 1, and is seeking course materials from any alcohol industry source or educational institution wishing to teach alcohol awareness courses.

Course materials should be submitted to Comptroller of the Treasury, Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Division, Goldstein Treasury Building, Room 310, Annapolis, Maryland 21401.

Under the law, the comptroller must be certain that approved courses meet the statutory requirements, including instruction on how the consumption of alcohol affects the body and behavior of an individual, education on drinking and driving, and effective methods for serving customers to avoid their intoxication.

The law requires one individual from the establishment—either the licensee or a designated employee — to complete an approved training course by September 1, 1990. If a course which is ultimately approved has been completed in the past five years, it will satisfy the training requirement.

FINANCE

DIRECTOR, FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT

If you have the right qualifications, the ability to excel, and the desire to make a vital contribution, the Mass Transit Administration (MTA) invites your application for the position of Director of Financial Management. Reporting to the chief financial officer, you will have an exceptional opportunity to design, deliver, and manage a financial planning and accountability system for agency-wide operations. The MTA is an enterprise agency on Maryland DOT providing bus and rail public transportation to the Baltimore metropolitan area. The agency is regulated but the work is definitely not!

Managing a staff of ten professionals, you will be responsible for strategic planning, financial and economic analysis, budgeting and cost management, and related control and information systems. You must have demonstrated ability to lead and direct and have strong conceptual, analytical, and communication skills. To qualify for consideration, you must have a relevant bachelor's degree plus 10 years of progressively responsible experience - including at least 4 years in supervision or program management. Most importantly, your experience should provide for a broad perspective and a solid understanding of the art of corporate "gatekeeping." We offer a competitive salary and excellent fringe benefit program. Please submit your resume and salary requirement to:
