—A full time ministry

As he reflected on his life, Rev. Martin shared how he knew that he was truly sent to the prisons by God.

He knows within himself that he is in the right place at the right time.

In preparing for what he thought was going to be a regular ministry, God led him to major in Criminal Justice.

Because of his personal experiences with the justice system, Rev. Martin feels he has a greater understanding of what the inmates are going through.

He sees the inmates as people, as individuals, torn and tattered by life in some way or another.

In listening to him we realize that except for the Grace of God, it could be anyone of us.

Rev. Martin spoke of some of his learning experiences, how one can't take things for granted, how one needs toknow the difference between what you have control of and what you don't.

And now one needs to stay in constant prayer. Rev. Martin says he prays before entering into the prison and stays in prayer all day.

"There is a lot of the things happening inside the jail that society doesn't know. If you have never been incarcerated, then you don't know what it is like," stated Rev. Martin.

He shared with us the confidence that the inmates have shown him. "They come to ask about legal advice knowing all I can do is to refer them. They come, they come to talk about decisions, they come to ask for prayer, they come with family problems, they come if only to cry.

"They come if they need consoling in the time of bereavement, they come wanting scriptures and theye come wanting Spiritual counseling.

"They come seeking compassion, not sympathy. I don't let them play games."

Rev. Martin talked about the talents of those incarcerated. He spoke about the need to direct that talent in the right direction. "If I didn't believe that everybody is salvageable, I wouldn't be working where I am."

"I would like to see the inmates have their own employment agency, completely run and worked by inmates and former inmates," says Rev. Martin.

To help the inmates who do not have the proper personal items, Rev. Martin has gone to outside sources to collect tooth paste, tooth brushes, face clothes, lotion, hair oils, and shaving gear. Bibles are always in great demand.

There is so much for the body of Christ to do, if only to donate to those in prison. Rev. Martin talked about the people that God has chosen to do this type of ministry, he said, "There is a rareness about them that only comes from God." In talking with these two men of God, I can attest that it takes a rare person, called to the task to get the job done.

If you would like to donate any of the personal items listed in the article, please contact Rev. Martin at 396-8146.

National Baptist deacons to convene in Baltimore

The National Baptist Deacons Convention and its Auxiliaries will be at the Hunt Valley Marriott from Monday through Friday, July 24-28, for its 55th annual session.

Delegates and visitors will meet to discuss business matters and attend workshops on the theme "Partakers of His Divine Nature."

The thrust of the convention's workshops is to provide modern training that church leaders can apply to everyday situations as they assist pastors with the conduct of their churches.

Nearly 2,000 persons are expected to pass through the meetings during the week.

In addition to early morning (5:30 a.m.) prayer meetings and the religious workshops, the convention will award several scholarships and trophies to its youth for participation in spelling bees and oratorical contests.

The convention's Missionary Board is expected to award several thousands of dollars to service organizations such as the NAACP, the United Negro College Fund, orphanages, and local charities nominated by the delegates.

Other highlights of the convention will be the opening night presentation Monday at 7:30 p.m., featuring local dignitaries and the convention's keynote address by Deaconess Marguerite F. Christian from Richmond, VA.

Wednesday, at 11:00 a.m., the Women's Auxiliary will present its panel discussion.

Thursday night's banquet speaker will be The Reverend James L. Ball, Pastor of Baltimore's Timothy Baptist Church.

The convention, founded in 1934, has affiliates in major cities in the Eastern United States. The current National President is Dr. J. Martin Capehart of Baltimore, who strongly encourages the convention and its delegates to increase efforts to address social ills in our nation.

The current National President of the Women's Auxiliary is Deaconess Helen V. Tate from Washington, D.C. and she has initiated an ambitious plan to increase the convention's penetration into other states.

Miss Dorelle Smith from Media, PA, is the National Youth President and works with a team of advisors to pursue endeavors that are both culturally and spiritually enriching for the convention's youth.
