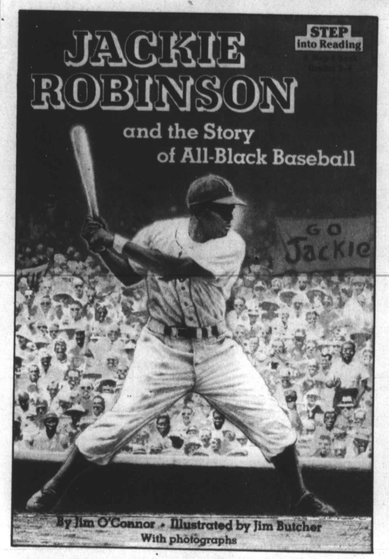
Jackie Robinson



SPORTING GREAT: The cover of a new book that takes a look at the life of Jackie Robinson. Reprinted by permission of Frederick Glasser.

By Gregory A. King
AFRO Intern

He's a man all children should learn about (especially black children) because his determination and strong will paved the way for blacks to play baseball in the major league. He is a man who saw hard times and weathered the storm.

His name is Jackie Robinson, the first black man to ever play baseball in the major league.

Now there is a new book out in the book stores for children that tells the story of the great sportsman. The book is entitled "Jackie Robinson and the Story of All-Black Baseball." It is written by Jim O'Connor.

Before Mr. Robinson's time, blacks had to play baseball in the Negro leagues. Because of segregation they were not allowed to play baseball in professional white leagues.

On April 15, 1947, the Brooklyn Dodgers became innovators in the world of baseball. They offered a talented black man a chance to play on their team. This was a good move on their part because Robinson proved to be an asset to the Dodgers and the game itself.

By the middle of Robinson's first season, other teams started signing up black players. By the end of Jackie's first season he had a hitting record of .296. He lead the Dodgers in runs scored and stolen bases. And, he belted out 12 home runs that season, averaging more than any other Dodger that year.

Fourteen years after Jackie Robinson's first game with the Dodgers, the Negro league was wiped out.

His story is one of courage, determination and strength. If you want to find out more about the late Jackie Robinson and all black baseball you can pick up a copy in most bookstores or write the publisher, Random House, 201 East Fifth Street, New York, N.Y. 10022.

Gregory Gibson, Latricia Tyson, DCCA President Edward L. Nelson and Morina E. Jackson at DCCA Scholarship Awards Dinner, June 23.

Students Honored

The District of Columbia Contractors Association (DCCA) recently awarded college scholarships to three 1989 graduates of D.C. public schools, at the recent Association's Eighth Scholarship Awards Dinner.

The students honored by the organization will attend historically black colleges in the Fall. Morina E. Jackson, recipient of the K. Louise Dunlop Scholarship, is a graduate of the School Without Walls and will be attending Hampton University.

The other awardees are Gregory Gibson, a graduate of Eastern High School, who will be a freshman next year at Florida A&M University and Latricia Tyson, who graduated from Dunbar High School, who will attend Morgan State University, Baltimore.

"I am happy because it has given me a chance to further my education," said Gibson.

The scholarship was established in 1981 for minority participation in construction in the capitol area. "The DCCA is dedicated to finding opportunities for minority contractors to participate in the wealth of construction in this city," said DCCA President Edward L. Nelson.

"At the same time and with equal enthusiasm, we are dedicated to finding fostering and creating employment opportunities that can fulfill and reward the young people of Washington."
