IF YOU ASK ME

By Bettye Moss

Editor's Note: Bettye Moss is on vacation. Her column this week is written by her sister, Ida Peters.

One of the highlights of our visit to Eastern Regional Conference of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority was "An Evening at the Wadsworth Atheneum," America's oldest public art museum in Hartford, Conn.

Sorors viewed the Simpson Collection which is made of 6,000 items over three centuries about black Americans in art, science, social studies, politics, literature and history.

There are more than 2,200 photos and many rarities including an autographed photo of Booker T. Washington, when he became first principal of Tuskegee.

A bust of Harriett Tubman, dated 1895. The State of Connecticut has funded the Amistad Foundation which used the work of Randolph Linsley Simpson of Northford, Conn. in collecting these items over 25 years.

Imagine you are at the Baltimore Museum of Art. Well, the Wadsworth Atheneum, in downtown Hartford, Conn. is just as elegant and even more imposing. The entire Art Museum was turned over to Delta Sigma Theta sorors under Randolph Simpson himself and Sorors Johnene Adams and Ledonia Gray, chairs.

As you entered the Museum you were given a floor plan and you were free to visit the priceless objects in the various galleries; take the Black History Tour; stop in the main court, around the fountain, for drinks and finger food; view African dancers.

Hostesses gave each of us an invitation that said, "Your Mission is . . ." Each invitation had different colored dots and you were to find five new friends with the same colored dots.

Two of my new friends were Sorors Georgette Hennigan and Poutheria Roundtree from Trenton, N.J. Both sent hellos to Aloha McCullough and Jo Brown of Baltimore.

While the founding benefactor is the State of Connecticut the founding contributors are the Connecticut Chapters of the Links. Why,

Why, What, Amistad?

If you're on vacation and your mind is resting out in left field with the Orioles, you are pleasantly shocked to find in a City like Hartford a collection of 6,000 artifacts on black heritage.

Why? Here's what the catalogue says about "The Amistad Affair." In July, 1938, The Spanish slave ship, Amistad sailed with African slaves and mulatto children headed for Cuba. The Africans lead by Cinque mutinied. Finally the starving Africans docked on Long Island and were captured and taken to New London, Conn.

The Amistad Affair affected diplomatic relations between Spain, England and the United States for decades. Yale Divinity students taught English to the Africans and the affair was a catalyst for the Abolitionist Movement in New England.

The victims were tried in Hartford, Conn. and were found guilty of mutiny. But, former president, John Quincy Adams went before the Supreme Court and gained their release on the argument they were engaged in self defense against going into slavery.

All this history to point out what other cities are doing when black conventions bring their big bucks to town. There was much talk at the Eastern Region that Baltimore Deltas want to bid on the next National Convention of 12,000 people coming here in 1994.

Best Idea

When large conventions come to any town there is always a problem of moving people from hotels to the Civic Center. Hartford solved this problem with a fleet of school buses that made the rounds of six hotels every 15 minutes.

In San Francisco, Greyhound buses were used but they didn't stop at every hotel. You had to walk miles to catch the convention buses. Just some little thoughts for a more progressive convention bureau to start thinking about because the cab situation in Baltimore is a pain for natives.

New Psalmist closing

The New Psalmist Christian School, Summer Enrichment Academy at 4501 Frederick Road held its closing exercises last Friday at the church, Mulberry and Park Aves.

The Rev. Leah White is director and she and her teachers have done a marvelous job with the 300 or more children in their care this summer.

They based their summer program around the theme, "Baltimore My Baltimore" combining the history of Baltimore in original songs and skits, outstanding Baltimore blacks and historic places they visited over the summer.

Self-assured Miss Bridgette Smith was mistress of ceremony and Miss Kimberly Terry gave the opening prayer.

It did your heart good to watch talented teachers bring out the best in children in such a short time.

Teachers included Ola Feaster, Theodosia Pender, Mary Kelley, Michelle Hayes, Stephanie Moore, Carol Hammond and Deborah Staples. Mona Hanson from Flair Studios led her students in creative dance with Ms. Sylvia Person on the piano.

Highlight was the closing game "Win, Lose an Draw" on Baltimore with students drawing places that classes had visited like City Hall, Shot Tower, etc. and the audience enthusiastically guessed.

Rev. Duckette honored

The Waters A.M.C. Church family, under the new pastorate of the Rev. Ronald E. Braxton and the Rev. Marie Phillips Braxton, honored the former pastor, the Rev. John W. Duckette and his wife Minnie at a testimonial banquet recently at LaFontaine Bleu.

Many members of this historic church family along with community and Presiding Elders Edward C. Wilson, and Earle E. Brooks came out to show their appreciation for Rev. Duckett's 14-year ministry at this East Baltimore landmark.

Many may remember that Rev. Duckette replaced the late Rev. Melvin Chester Swann whose untimely death left the pulpit vacant.

The Rev. Mr. Duckett is a native of Union County, S.C. and has pastored many A.M.E. churches including Mt. Olive in Annapolis and now Grace A.M.E. in Catonsville.

He holds a Master of Divinity degree from Howard University. His wife of 25 years is a native of Orangeburg, S.C. and is a retired educator.

Daughter, Mrs. Myrna D. Harris of Washington, D.C. attended with her son, Isaac, and toasted her father on behalf of the family. Son Thomas, who lives on the West Coast was unable to attend.

Guest speaker was the Rev. Walter E. Hildebrand, Presiding Elder. Toastmaster was the Rev. M. Arthur Camper; Mrs. Sarah L. Harley was chairman.

Alfreda Madison remembered

By Hamil Harris
AFRO Staff Writer

There is an empty chair in the White House briefing room. A chair which was occupied by Alfreda Madison, 84, the White House and Capitol Hill correspondent for the Washington Informer newspaper and syndicated columnist for 110 newspapers and five magazines.

Ms. Madison, died of cancer July 28 at George Washington University Hospital and although this school teacher turned journalist had been a reporter for a shorter period than most of her colleagues she was a journalist extraordinaire.

"Alfreda," as she was affectionately called by her peers had all the right stuff: blunt, to the point and inquisitive, but at the same time she was warm caring and charming.

It was so easy to reflect on "Alfreda" as this reporter sat in the southwest Washington home of a woman who had spent the past 14 years being their eyes and ears of African Americans in places where black people are often not welcome.

Her headlines on her stories told her story: Reagan's actions does not match rhetoric. Many American whites still high on racism, you only count if you vote and one of her last stories, Bush strategy unable to attract blacks.

During one of the last news conferences held by President Reagan this reporter was just glad to be there, but Madison was on a mission and she would not fail that night.

There are only 30 minutes during a presidential news conference and the event is more like a roller derby as each news organization jockeys to question the president. That night was no exception.

With four minute left in the game, everyone knew President Reagan would call on one last reporter, before Helen Thomas of UPI would signal the end of the match and say, "Thank you Mr. President."

The shouting was fierce and would calm down only after Reagan called on someone. Alfreda and a white male reporter both stood up for the last question...well...Alfreda sat the man down..and kept Reagan in check.

Miss. Madison, moved to Washington and joined the Washington Informer in 1974. A graduate of Virginia State University, Miss Madison was born and reared on a tobacco and peanut farm in McKenny, Va.

After receiving a masters degree from Howard University, Madison spent most of her professional life teaching school in Boykin, Va, Richmond and New York City.

Ms. Madison is survived by a brother and four sisters.
