Five teachers, two mothers and a bright future:

T. Rowe Price V.P. Jackie Hrabowski

By Charles H. Brown
AFRO Business Editor

They say you can always tell a Virginia woman - there seems to be an air of relaxed grace and confidence about them.

Jackie Coleman-Hrabowski, has taken that rarefied Virginia air, straight to the upper reaches of Baltimore's T. Rowe Price investment house as it's national director of Training and Development.

What does she do exactly? Well, she teaches, which should come as no surprise - her entire life seems to have been covertly directed by teachers.

"It's my 'bent,'" Hrabowski said, using the term to draw a picture of not only her responsibilities for implementing corporate training programs and helping individual managers to realize their specific training needs, but also how she brings her personality to play in meeting them.

"The first person I ever heard use that word was a Sunday School teacher in Virginia. That was the first person in my life to have such a large impact on me."

Jackie Hrabowski (L) discusses career development opportunities with Marriett Drew, coordinator of Retirement Planning Services and Ric Tate, Sr., retirement planning specialists.

It's the Black Classics revisited. The story of growing up strong and independent, surrounded by large green spaces, under blue skies; instructed by the wisdom of the ages in the form of family and family friends and supported by strong family ties, in this case, to two parents who both happen to be teachers.

"Meade Coleman and L-u-z-e-a-r Coleman," that spelling is different and special, Jackie Hrabowski said. So was the impact on the families four children, including the eldest, Jacqueline.

"I've had two mothers in my life who have influenced me," said Hrabowski. My own mother, Mrs. Coleman and Maggie Hrabowski. Both of them were teachers."

Away at college "Jackie" made friends easily. Included in her crowd was Freeman Hrabowski, who, Jackie's quiet confidence made her intelligence a secret until Freeman, who just knew he was smart, according to Jackie, came to her after she had gotten the school's highest score on the math SAT exams.

"I was surprised myself, she said. "I was never certain how I would do having come from a small country school."

She seems to have done pretty well, if her seventh floor office and corporate wide responsibilities are any indication.

The Hrabowski's, who will celebrate their 19th anniversary this week, married and moved to Baltimore 13 years ago, when Freeman Hrabowski was offered a position on the staff of Morgan State University.

When they first arrived in town, they lived with relatives, Ola and Nick Aaron Ford, both teachers (with Nick Aaron Ford being one of the first Ph.D's on the Morgan staff) and shared the couple's philosophy of life.

"There are a lot of things you can do in life but you can't sit down," Jackie Hrabowski recalls hearing and apparently both Hrabowski's took it to heart.

Freeman Hrabowski is now the vice provost at University of Maryland-College Park, a position he has held for the past three years and Jackie's promotion this summer from regional to national Training and Development director, a new position within the company was, according to her a surprise. Or is this that quiet grace and confidence of a Virginia woman.

Jackie Hrabowski prefers to give the credit to a list of influences, primarily teachers, but also including her husband Freeman, their son Eric Coleman, who has Jackie's maiden name... "As a child, we wanted him to have a last name that he could spell."

And to the family church, Unity Baptist. "The church and my husband really keep me going," Jackie added. Whatever credit is left she spreads evenly over those she has come in contact with and who in some way or another continue to be a part of her life.

"You pick up pieces of people's lives as you go," Hrabowski said.

NNPA receives Robinson

TOP LEVEL WELCOME! New Orleans Mayor Sidney Barthelemy, center, welcomes Michael Green, Manager, Black Consumer Marketing, Pepsi-Cola Company and Ronald Harrison, Director, Community Relations, PepsiCo, to New Orleans recently for the 49th Annual Convention of the National Newspaper Publishers Association. The mayor brought greetings during the luncheon meeting sponsored by PepsiCo and Pepsi-Cola. Dr. William Robinson, Director, Minority Health Services, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, urged the publishers and their guests to join in the federal agency's attempt to improve the health of the African American family. Dr. Robinson spoke on behalf of Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, Secretary of Health and Human Services.
