

Ans.—He came up, while some gentlemen were talking, he said “the election was very badly conducted, and whether I am elected or not, I do not consider it any election.”

Ques.—Was Isaac Marshall present at this conversation?

Ans.—I do not remember. Mr. Woolford was not talking to me; he was speaking to the crowd: probably there were a half dozen present; all of the party expressed themselves as he did.

CROSS EXAMINATION BY MR. JONES.

Ques.—What time did you go to Dublin?

Ans.—About 10½ A. M., after the polls were closed at Princess Anne. I went in company with B. F. Lankford and Lieut. Porter.

Ques.—Who is Lieut. Porter?

Ans.—He belonged to the Eastern Shore Guard.

Ques.—Did Edward Taylor go with you?

Ans.—No sir, he did not go with us, but I knew of his going from Princess Anne.

Ques.—Did you know whether Mr. B. F. Lankford loaned him a horse to go.

Ans.—I do not know. Lieut. Porter and myself rode in Mr. Lankford's carriage.

Ques.—What was the purpose of your visit to Dublin?

Ans.—Only to see what was going on.

Ques.—Were not you and Mr. B. F. Lankford both active supporters of Mr. Long and Dr. Dashiell, at that election?

Ans.—I would have voted for them, and have done all I could to elect them.

Ques.—Was your purpose in going to Dublin to promote their election?

Ans.—Not especially.

Ques.—Were Democratic voters objected to, after you arrived at Dublin?

Ans.—I do not know for certain. We were in a little back room at dinner, while one of the clerks and Mr. Edward Taylor were quarrelling. Mr. Taylor remarked, that he had never seen such conduct at the polls in his life, that secesh blockade runners and everybody else were voting. From that, Mr. Lankford took it up, and they had a quarrel—he asked who
