

Home Of First Governor Wi'l Be Sold By Marchand Estate Heirs

The oldest house in the city, at 211 Prince George street, the home of the late Francis T. Marchand will be offered for sale by executors of the estate, John T. Marchand announced today.

Mr. Marchand was named executor without bond and without being required to make an inventory of the estate under the will of his late brother which was filed for probate here today.

Property To Be Divided

Mr. Marchand left his entire estate, consisting of stocks, bonds and his home here, to his brother and directed that he divide it with another brother, Dr. George B. Marchand, and two sisters, Mrs. Anne del Valle and Mrs. Philip Weston.

Each of the brothers will receive a third of the estate and the two sisters one sixth each.

Mr. Marchand died on July 17 at his home. He had been a resident of Annapolis since 1870 and soon after coming here he bought the house at 211 Prince George.

Home of Governor

The old house is believed to have been the one built here in 1684 by Major Philip Dorsey, who also built the first St. Anne's church and King Williams School. It was at this house that the first colonial council in Annapolis gathered. It also was the home of Sir Francis Nicholson, the first colonial governor of the city to live in this city.

The subsequent owners have made changes in the plans to bring it to its present appearance. These changes have been in the form of additions to the house and all of the original structure remains. The property are the old slave quarters, long assumed empty, the old parsonage, the old school house and a garden. The house is on Prince George street, between State and...
