O'Dunne, after serving nineteen years on the Supreme Bench of Baltimore, retired four years ago because of the constitutional age limit of 70.

Another prospective O'Dunne attorney of the fourth generation is just growing up. David O'Dunne's boy, Eugene O'Dunne 3d, aged 3, already digs into law books, his father says.

Arizona Justice

The first generation of the legal family was represented by Judge Edmund F. O'Dunne, who was chief justice of Arizona in 1875 when the area was a territory of the United States. In those days, he dropped the "O." He died in 1904.

His son was former Judge O'Dunne, who still practices law here, since his retirement from the bench. Judge O'Dunne was born in 1875, was graduated from the University of Maryland Law School in 1900, served seven years as a member of the Baltimore State's attorney's office and went on the bench in 1926.

The oldest of his sons, Eugene O'Dunne, Jr., now practices law in Washington. The second son, Harilton O'Dunne, who served in the Maryland Legislature a few years ago, practices in Baltimore, and for the past six years has served as an assistant city solicitor of Baltimore.

David, the youngest son, was graduated from the University of Baltimore Law School last June. While at law school he also served as a bailiff of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore, under Associate Judge Michael J. Manley.
