

WON'T SHOW VICTIM'S FINGERS

Gruesome Exhibits in Snowden Trial Withheld.

The five fingers of Mrs. Lottie May Brandon, under the nails of which is said to have been found dark skin and short black hairs, indicating that she scratched her assailant, will not be shown the jury in the Snowden murder trial at Towson. The prosecution will rely on the testimony of Dr. A. H. Carr, expert of Washington, to bring out this feature of the case.

Dr. Carr took the stand yesterday as the last witness of the day and State's Attorney Green, of Anne Arundel county, and State's Attorney Hartman, of Baltimore county, said that he probably would be the last witness. The defense will present its side of the case today and tomorrow and the fate of Snowden will be in the hands of the jury by Thursday night.

The skin found under the nails, Dr. Carr said, was identical with that taken from a member of the colored race and the short hairs were such as would be taken from a man's face, they having the appearance of having been cut off with a knife or razor. Asked if the skin could have been that taken from a white person with dark skin, Dr. Carr said "not in that degree." Dr. Carr further testified that Mrs. Brandon's death was caused from shock introduced by a series of injuries. He was positive that the cuts and bruises found on the neck were made by some one seemingly from behind.
