EXTRACTS from LONDON PRINTS.

BRUSSELS, October 23.

The accounts transmitted from hence to England are shamefully exaggerated:—The revolution they speak of is not only unknown here, but unlooked for also.—There are a few mal-contents, who seem anxious to introduce a firebrand from the popular conflagration at Liege, to this capital; but, depend upon it, no commotion has hitherto been excited to affect the Imperial authority in Brabant.

SURRENDER of the Fortress of BELGRADE.

The day before yesterday arrived a courier from Vienna, with the important news of the capture of the fortress of Belgrade, which surrendered the 8th of this month, to the army commanded by field marshal Laudohn, with all the artillery, consisting of 312 pieces of cannon, all the arms, military chests, and magazines. The garrison, after being disarmed, were conducted to Orsowa, from whence they will be free to retire into the territories of the grand seignior.

The emperor has, on this occasion, sent an order here to the cardinal archbishop, to celebrate high mass, and to officiate in person.

Marshal Laudohn has been complimented with the grand croix of the order of St. Etienne. Counts Joseph Colloredo and Wallis are raised to the rank of field marshals. Prince Hohenloe, count Clairfayt, and count Brown, are made commanders of the military order of Maria-Theresa.

Thus have the Imperial armies in three weeks obtained five important victories, made themselves masters with little bloodshed, of a fortress deemed almost impregnable, the key of European Turkey on the German frontiers, and reduced the provinces of Bessarabia, Wallachia, Bosnia, and Servia; and there is not a strong fortress, nor a powerful army to stop their progress to Constantinople. Perhaps, early in the next campaign, Laudohn may, at the gates of that capital, dictate peace; and the Porte may be compelled, by the cession of its European territories, to purchase the safety of its Asiatic empire. It were superfluous to declaim on the danger which must arise to the system of Europe from these events. The present is the moment, when its equilibrium is to be preserved.—An interposition of the triple alliance in defence of Turkey, might obtain for England a port in the Archipelago, and a recovery of that Levant trade, once the source of so much opulence.—This measure, and the declaration of the independence of the Belgic provinces, with the appearance of an English or Dutch squadron in the Baltic, would effectually remedy the evil. Let it be remembered, that the liberties of Germany depend only on the vigour of the Prussian monarchy; and that the cohesion of that mass, made up of discordant and hostile parts, is only preserved by the fortuitous circumstance of talent in its ministers, or monarch.

LONDON, October 23.

A cause was not long since brought before lord Kenyon, at Guildhall, wherein an apothecary was plaintiff, to recover the amount of a bill, for the injustice of which demand the defendant's counsel appealed to the bill itself, and, upon being read, was found to run thus—"Mr. ———, debtor for the cure of his wife," whereas the defendant's wife actually died while under the plaintiff's care. This curious mode of cure not only raised a laugh at the doctor's expence, but lost him the cause into the bargain.

A BASTILE RELIC.

An affecting letter from an Italian lady, a Madam Ladouze-Lasflours, who was imprisoned in the Bastile, and condemned to death, September 26, 1669.

"MY DEAR CHILD,

"I have just received the sentence of death, and I feel nothing grievous in it, but the fear, lest in dying, the same blow in reverberation will kill you. Death is, in one view, agreeable to me; because it is an opportunity of making a sacrifice to God; in another view, it overwhelms my soul in grief, as it obliges me to abandon the half of myself. I have no more words to say, than to bid you adieu with my mouth. Oh! unhappy me, that I cannot join it to thine. Kiss these last characters; and so those will kiss the hand that writes them, and the heart that speaks to thee.—Adieu—for ever."

From my Prison, Friday, September 27, 1669.

This letter being found in the Bastile, it is evident that it never went where it was directed.

O despotism! infernal despotism!

This article is taken from authentic memoirs of the Bastile, lately printed in Paris, in three volumes.

Oct. 27. A letter from Stockholm, dated Oct. 6, says, "Every thing remains quiet in Finland. A Russian ship of the line, of 74 guns, was wrecked near Parkumaki last week. During the campaign in Finland, 110 of our officers have been killed or wounded. Our grand fleet remains at Carlscrona, notwithstanding which preparations of war continue the same."
