nduct of both parties during the war, when our li-rties were at stake. The whigs risked every thing—e tories nothing, except the risk of being found out playing a double game. Such of them who took ms against us during the conflict, I can heartily for-ve. In my mind they are greatly preferable to don-dealers. The great object of liberty being obtain-the tories stand forth, and endeavour to get into places of public trust. It is not the smiling ntenance, the polite address, the handsome person, any other outside qualifications, that can shew the ar. We can best judge from actions, and by such e best guided. Real whigs are commonly sorry cour-rt—Real tories possess the arts of flattery, servility, d constant attendance where they have any parti-lar views. Their principles are aristocratical in the eatest degree. They herd together, and will court wer wherever it is lodged, while the whigs are too en dived.

Let us therefore, my countrymen, always endeavour get the best delegates who offer. Let us choose such n as were never suspected of any thing inimical to erty. Such is the hearty wish of
