

Man from Michigan named administrator of city's courts

By THEODORE W. HENDRICKS

The Supreme Bench yesterday announced that Terrence T. Deinlein, 33, a court administrator in Ann Arbor, Mich., had been appointed administrator of the Baltimore courts and will start work in July.

Mr. Deinlein said yesterday from his Ann Arbor office that he was "very happy" to take over the Baltimore post and would settle here as soon as he could sell his house.

He added that he was "impressed with the renaissance" he had observed in his visits to the city and had received a "very cordial welcome—even from a ticket seller at an Orioles game" he attended.

Court administrative duties have been carried out on a temporary basis by Robert H. Bouse, a former Superior Court clerk, since the resignation of Selig Solomon in May, 1979.

Mr. Solomon, a lawyer, resigned from the top administrative post after articles in The Sun pointed out that he violated court rules by engaging in the private practice of law while on the court payroll. Mr. Solomon, who had held the administrative job since December, 1975, later admitted he had maintained a private legal practice in violation of a city ordinance prohibiting the court administrator from practicing law.

Mr. Bouse, a courthouse employee for 37 years, was appointed interim administrator just after he had been defeated for the clerkship of the Superior Court.

Duties of the court administrator include handling day-to-day affairs of the city's 22 civil and criminal courts and initiating programs to keep dockets from lagging from an overload of cases.

The job pays $36,000 a year and is one of the top administrative posts in the city.

Mr. Deinlein, who serves at the pleasure of the Supreme Bench, worked in Ann Arbor as a Circuit Court administrator for three.
