Maryland Super-Phosphate

(We court the Chemist's inquiry.)

After 23 years' experience in the Fertilizing business, and after establishing a wide reputation for the purity and excellence of his Bone Dust, the subscriber has been induced to prepare a Phosphate suitable to the requirements and every way worthy the attention of the Southern Farmer.

The "MARYLAND" is a rejuvenator and permanent improver of the soil. It stimulates equal to Peruvian Guano, and sustains equal to Bone, being composed almost entirely of these ingredients, with a very liberal percentage of Potash in the residuum. There is no adulterator nor inferior article used—every particle of the Phosphate being of essential benefit to the land.—Neither pains nor expense have been spared in its preparation, and we claim for it the greatest benefit to the farmer from the smallest outlay.

For Cotton, Wheat and Corn, and as a general stimulant and aliment for worn and impoverished land there can be nothing superior. It is warranted to run as high in Ammonia and higher in Bone Phosphate than any other fertilizer in the market.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

A Scotch Farmer and his Work.

Mr. Curtis presented the following report of the committee, consisting of himself and Mr. Lyman, appointed to visit William Crozier's farm, located on Long Island, some forty miles from New York. In 1868 there where on the place six or eight cows, a pair of mules, a horse or two, and 300 head of Merino sheep. They made about seventy-five loads of manure. The 600 acres of arable land was out into twenty or more small fields, divided from each other by old hedge rows full of briers and small cedars. Several hundred acres were in an old common that yielded scant pasture for two or three months in summer. Much of this common was overgrown with oak-bushes, little cedars, and hickory stunts. Now we find the farm stocked with eighty-two horned cattle of superior thorough-bred stock, fifty-two horses, twenty-seven sheep, seven five hogs, three hundred hens, and thirty-five ducks, and he buys no hay, no corn, or oats, no roots. He has fifty acres in one clover field. The sole outlay for cattle food is about $500 for wheat shorts. Instead of seventy-five loads of manure we estimate his compost piles for use this spring and summer to contain 6,000 loads. Manure making with this vigorous farmer is not a theory—an effort and a wish merely—as it is with thousands. He makes it. There are the immense banks of it standing a fathom deep in the main stockyard, and looming above the furrows of all the ploughed fields. His compost pile is not the winter's accumulations thrown into the yard from stable doors and windows to be hauled in the field in April and May. Manure making composting goes on the year round; no day of winter so frozen but it sees additions to the piles of fertillizers; no summer morning without its round of chores that swell the heap. "Everything," he says, "must have a mother, and manure is the mother of all things." He keeps an ox team, and has them driven steadily at work the year around hauling absorbents and composting stuff. His task is, five loads before dinner and five after dinner, of leaves from the woodlands, muck weeds and salt mud. His calculation is that the solid droppings of a cow or ox amount to something like ten loads in a year, and that loads of muck and leaves should be composted with it. For manure-making he says four sheep equal a cow, a horse equals two cows, and two hogs equal a cow. Pasture land he does not believe in. Young animals and milch cows should have a small range and run in it an hour or two for exercise. But a quarter of a mile a day is all the walk a milch cow needs. This forcing a cow to range over a wide reach of hill and swamp and moor and wood for the material to make milk off, he insists, the crying sin of American dairymen. He is a thorough believer in cooking for all farm animals in winter, and cutting green food for them all summer. Biginning, for instance, with May, he goes through the year as follows: May—Old Hay, the last of the stalks and roots, and rye. June—Clover and oats. July—Sowed corn and fresh meadow hay. August Sowed corn, clover, and oats. September Sowed corn, field corn, soft heads of cabbage. October' and November—Turnip tops, corn, beet tops, carrot tops, and roots. November 15 to May 15—Boiled food, corn stalks, hay and roots steamed together and sprinkled with meal and shorts; the rate being about four tons roots to one of stalks and hay. He used Prindle's boiler, large size, and a double steam box. The stalks and roots are all cut fine, shovelled into the box, and the steam let on. In about six hours it is soft so that a stick can be pushed through it. It is allowed to cool to the temperature of the blood before it is given to the animal. His roots, Swedes, mangolds, and carrots are grown in the following manner: Draw furrows say two and a half feet apart, and fill them with manure; then cover with a double furrow and roll flat, and open enough to receive the seed; cultivate with horse-hoe. On land not remarkably fertile he gets thirty-five tons to the acre; allowing thirty bushels to the ton, that crop is 1,000 bushels. He harvests by ploughing them out, first clipping the tops while in the ground with a sharp steel hoe; then he harrows over the field, lifting the teeth as the roots become entangled. Then dumpcarts go on, and gather and throw them into long piles by the road. These piles are covered with tops, straw and earth and loads are taken out daily as they are needed at the barn. With 6,000 loads of manure he has enough to dress thirty acres very heavily and all his Sweedes were large, as also his carrots many of them, taken from any part of the pile, measuring three inches across the crown. He cut sixty tons of hay, and we saw at least twenty yet in the barns, (middle of March) for his dependence is upon roots. He had thirty-two acres in roots in 1870, and estimates his crop at 30,000 bushels. Besides these crops he has made extensive and permanent ameliorations. Bushes have been grubbed up, fences rebuilt on all parts of the place, tough old pastures thoroughly ploughed, the forests trimed and raked, young groves of locusts nursed, gates hung, high yard fences built, and roads graded. He has the best milk house we have ever seen, not excepting the famous dairies of Chester County, west of Philadelphia. His hog-pens are commenced on an excellent model, but to describe all these and his system in connection with them, would be to write a treatise on butter and pork making. We submit this as a report of progress, and have given the chief features of his faith as an agricultural thinker, and his practice as a successful farmer. Nor have we said these emphatic things from a wish to praise Mr. Crozier, but simply to let farmers know how striking the real successes of their profession are.—N. Y. World.

Breaking Colts.

When the colt is a few weeks old he has a comfortable head-stall put on his head and left there until he has become perfectly familiar with it. He is then taken hold of gently (but not teased or petted) and given to understand that he is fast but is not going to be hurt. He soon learns to be fond of being handled, and is easily taught to be led wherever desired. This kind of treatment is continued up to weaning time, when he is carefully tied by the side of the mother, and as they can see each other there is little or no fretting done; the mare is soon dried up, and the colt which has not been teased nor taught any foolish tricks, such as biting and kicking, goes into winter quarters quiet and easily attended to. After this, up to the time he is three years old, he is let run in pasture during the summer season, and in wet days brought to the stable, haltered and his legs handled, his feet picked up as for shoeing, and in winter he is haltered in the stable at night and turned out during the day. After he is two years old he is accustomed to the saddle and harness, which is done on wet days, and by the time he is ready to go to work he has become accustomed to the things he would so much dread were he let run wild. Out of all the colts we have thus raised we have never had a kicker, baulker, or a runaway. I feel very confident that had we let all the colts we have broken, run until they were three or four years old, we would have to put up with some severe knocks before we could convince them they were in the hands of those more powerful than they. To handle a colt or heifer so as to make them pleasant to work with when they arrive at the age of maturity, does not go to prove that they must be petted and made fools of. I had a heifer come in this spring, and when I wanted to milk her I took a bucket and went to the field where she was and milked her without her moving once. If she had been let run wild to calving, the probabilities are that after calling in one or more to help catch her as the saying is, I would have been able, after being knocked about for some time, to milk her. We handle our stock of all kinds when young, the same as the colt, and find it saves a great many hard knocks.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

GETTING RID OF ROCKS.—We have noticed very often, in going about the country, a great amount of labor expended in digging out large stones and dragging them to the surface, where they lie a greater nuisance, if possible, than when they were partly buried in the soil. If a different mode of treatment had been followed, they might have been neatly and permanently disposed of. Instead of being brought to the surface, they should have been buried out of sight. Had a hole sufficiently large been dug close to the rock the removal of which was desirable, and underming it, a simple overbalancing with a crowbar or handspike would have tumbled it therein, and it might then have been covered up and forever gotten rid of. In this way an acre of ground can be easily cleared of large stones in a very short time, and the unsightly appearance of fence corners occupied by them avoided.

TO PREVENT COWS HOLDING UP THEIR MILK.—Take a log-chain, double it, then lay it gently over the cow's back—on the small of the back—so that the ends of the chain will clear the floor. The cow loses the power of holding up her milk, and after a few trials will forget the habit."
