ministerial papers affect to say—that "although the enemy, with their immense superiority of force, were the assailants, such was the gallantry displayed by our little army, that the objects of the assailants were completely frustrated." General Crawford, after effectually repelling the enemy's attack, retired in good order across the Coa, though not without the loss of about 270, including wounded and missing. This loss, though severe, was not greater than from the nature and duration of the contest, might naturally be expected

TO THE PUBLIC.

(By Request.)

Having heard some unfavorable reports concerning those who aided and assisted Mrs N. to make her escape, I cannot as a father, I will not as a man endure in silence such unfounded calumny; I have been made acquainted with the whole transaction, by evidence as good as ever banished the scruples of a doubting jury; I therefore must declare, that all those concerned in assisting her to escape, acted with prudence, humanity and firmness—and that they as much deserved the thanks of the community, as if they had rescued a woman from a gang of robbers, or a child from the claws of a tiger. These assertions, though [illegible], in due time may be proved in [illegible], and put to shame a tattling [illegible] hear a buzz, but do not know [illegible] of the sound; who eagerly [illegible] end of a half told tale, and [illegible] magic powers of imagination [illegible] all the rest to please them [illegible] the only apology that I shall [illegible] the warmth of my expressions, [illegible]:

[illegible] the respectability and high [illegible]: I her friends in Philadelphia [illegible] that her tender mother to all appearance is dying with grief on her account: I know the personal charms she did possess, and have lived to see them blasted in the prime of life by perpetual grief. I know her accomplishments were of the first rate order. I know that she was the distinguished idol of all her family—by nature a maker of peace. I know that by the sweetness of her temper, and the genuineness of her manners, she gained the esteem and love of all who knew her, excepting him who at the alter vowed to love and cherish her. And therefore at all possible hazards, I will vindicate her cause, and lash her tyrant round the world with a whip of scorpions.*—while a tribute of thanks I shall ever consider due to all those humane, generous and worthy beings who lent her a tender, helping hand, when fleeing from the worst of slavery, and from the worst of men; from repeated blows; from billingsgate abuse; from almost every possible hardship and indignity; from words too foul to utter—and from threatened death J.
