NEWS ITEMS.

The officers of the late armies North and South are taking to various civil avocations. Major General Averill is driving a team and keeping a feed store in the Pennsylvania oil regions. General Francis J. Herron is a commission merchant in New Orleans. Major General W. S. Smith has opened a retail grocery in Chicago, in partnership with Capt. Atkinson of his staff. A late Lieutenant General of the rebel army is a clerk in an Express office in New Orleans, and the officer who fought Franklin at Sabine is a bar keeper at Houston, Texas. A rebel Colonel was seen in Galveston, driving a dray with a mule, whose harness was made of ropes. The Colonel wore his uniform and all insignia of rank.

A letter from San Antonio says that everybody in Texas who has sheep wishes to get rid of them. Every wool-grower in the State, without an exception, was ruined by the immense mortality of their sheep in the last few years.—Fine merinoes are offered at $3 per head.

A bearer of despatches from Juarez, the President of Mexico, arrived at Kansas City, Mo., on Friday en route for Washington. The correspondent of a New Orleans paper, writing from Vera Cruz, says everything is unsettled in Mexico, and general distress prevails.

General Turner has notified the authorities of Richmond that the military police will be withdrawn at Christmas; also that they must immediately take charge of the inmates of the City Almshouse, who have recently been supported at the expense of the Government.

The tone and temper of the members of Congress who have up to the present time arrived at the Capital, Washington despatches say, indicate almost unanimity in opposition to the immediate admission of the representatives from the Southern States, and there is no dispostion manifested to repeal the Congressional test oath.

The Farmers' Bank of Kentucky having lost sixty thousand dollars by the Morgan raid in June, 1864, sued J. W. Witherspoon, a returned Morgan officer, attached his land and got judgment from a circuit court for the whole sum. He appeals the case.

Lieutenant General Grant, accompanied by General Comstock and Colonels Badeau and Babcock, of his staff, left Washington yesterday morning on a visit to Richmond, Charleston, and other Southern cities, and arrived in Richmond yesterday afternoon. This is the first time General Grant has ever visited Richmond, he not even entering the city at the time of its capture.

Frank Gurley, who murdered General McCook, whilst he was wounded and helpless, about two years since, was to be executed at Huntsville, Ala., on yesterday.

☞ THE Star on Tuesday, as it has done many times before, when run to the wall, and can find nothing else to say, appeals to the prejudices and passions of its readers in order to render us private injury.—Its editor is "surprised that Democrats can have any business transactions" with us. We can only say in reply to this, that if the editor of the Star was a fair specimen of his party, we should hold each individual member in as much contempt as we now do the principles of that party but there are very many who call themselves Democrats that we have the utmost respect for, and we would say to those, because we think they have principle and soul enough to appreciate it—that it is their party principles that we are warring against and not the man, nor their private interests. Anything that the Star may say does not in the least trouble us, for its character is too well known, and besides the acquirements its editor made while in the service of Jeff. Davis, added to his previous love for the rebel cause, no doubt assists him very much in his zeal in trying to build up something in the shape of a party out of the ruins of the defunct rebel cause, but already they are divided in the South for not a few in that section advocate negro suffrage and the admission of negro evidence before the Courts.

The Star denies that the Democratic party brought on the war. We say it did and history will prove it. Was it the "abolitionists" that fired upon a few helpless, half-starved Federal soldiers in Fort Sumter?—Was it abolitionists that fired upon the government vessels while attempting to provision those famishing men? Was it abolitionists in the South that fired salutes when Abraham Lincoln was first elected because they thought his election would justify them in the eyes of the world in seceding from the Union?—Was it the abolitionists that first called out armed troops? Was E. Louis Lowe a black republican when he, in 1860, on our green, advocated war to the knife and to the knife's hilt? Were those Southern members of Congress abolitionists, that by their own actions defeated a move in Congress in 1861, whereby slavery should be protected where it then existed?—Was it abolitionists that murdered Federal Soldiers while on their way to protect the national Capital?—History will say no. Rising generations will say no, and the Democratic party of the South and those Democrats of the border States and of the North, that coincided with them will be held responsible for the war, for its evils, and consequently their skirts have been stained by its blood.

SALE OF LIVE STOCK.—We invite the attention of our readers to the advertisement of sale of valuable Stock &c., to take place at the residence of Mr. Edward Woodall, in Chapel Destrict, and about four miles from Easton, on Wednesday next. Those that want bargains should not fail to attend.

Also to the sale of Mrs. Wm. B. Willis, administratrix of the late W. B. Willis, which comes off on the 13th inst., in Oxford Neck, and also the sale of Mrs. Robt. Banning and Henry Banning, administrators of Robt. Banning, deceased, at his late residence in Hopkin's Neck.

Court Proceedings.

Friday.—State vs. B. F. Newnam—jury sworn, demurr by defendant, a juror withdrawn and residue discharged. Powell for defendant. S. Stewart next friend of Jim Gibson colored, vs. James A. Ridgaway, appeal from the Orphans' Court, issue joined on the allegations alleged in the petition, trial by jury, record objected to by appellee on the ground that it does not correspond with the case on trial. Objection sustained by the Court. Motion by appellant to amend.—Jump and Powell for appellant. Kennard and Martin for appellee.

The Grand Jury came into Court, announced the conclusion of their duties and filed the following report to wit: "To the Hon. H. H. Goldsborough, Judge of the Circut Court for Talbot county, the Great Inquest of Talbot county, having performed their duty of visiting the Jail, take pleasure in stating to your Honor that they found the premises clearly and in good order, and that the present sheriff had contributed everything in his power to the comfort of the few prisoners that they found under his charge.

SAML. CHAMBERLAINE, Foreman.

Whereupon the Grand Jury was finally discharged after the thanks of the Court for their punctuality and fidelity with which they have discharged their duties.

Saturday. Samuel Stewart next friend of Jim Gibson vs. Jas. A. Ridgaway, appeal, &c., from the Orphans' Court, motion to amend writ and other proceedings so as to try the case on its real merits, motion resisted, prayer by appellee—granted, trial by Jury. Verdict for appellee.

Judgment of the court that Henry Barnett restore to Mullikin and Kemp the property stolen or the value thereof and undergo a confinement in the Penitentiary in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years from the date hereof. Petit Jury fully discharged, and court adjourned until Friday, December 8th, 1865.

Pardon Seekers and President Johnson.

The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer writes:

The number of pardon seekers who throng the White House are decreasing daily. On Saturday not over thirty were present, among whom was William Porcher Miles, of South Carolina. Approaching the President he said, "I come to procure a pardon, sir." "Under what class do you come?" asked the President. "I left a seat in Congress to join my State, and have only acted as thousand of others have done. You have pardoned two of my colleagues, Messrs McQueen and Boyce; my name is W. Porcher Miles and I only ask the same favor." The President promptly replied, "Your case must take its chance with others and in regular way; I cannot take it up now." This was an evident set-back, but Miles rallied and said: "Well, sir, I would like to have a permit to go to work in some civil pursuit, either mercantile or professional. I have lost everything and must do something."—"That is not necessary," answered the President, "there are no such papers used." Not to be put off, Miles continued, "Is there no mode by which I can expedite my pardon?" "None at all, unless you see the Attorney General and learn it, there are reasons why it should not be granted;" and the chivalric Miles bowed hurriedly out of the presence of the man he had so often mocked, to hunt up the Attorney General and hurry his pardon through, so he could get out of the sight of those whose associations were evidently so disagreeable to his refined senses.

As he left a seedy scion of another most noble family approached the President, and sought pardon and the restitution of his property. The same answer greeted him, that he must wait his turn. "Well," said he, "When I get it, will Congress interfere with me? for I hear pardons are of no account unless Congress confirms them," quoth the modest criminal, whose clothes indicated he had not long since flourished in the rank of a Brigadier General, and had been in vain pursuit of the "last ditch." "That, sir, is not my look out. I cannot answer for the action of Congress," said the President, and the partially reconstructed Rebel left in grave doubt as to whether his salvation would be very complete, even if he gets his parchment. The rest of the pardon hunters had no better success.

The Resources of our Country.

The Philadelphia Inquirer says, Natural history informs us that the dying notes of the swan are always its sweetest and strongest. As that pure and beautiful bird makes its final sweep on its wonted waters, curving its arching neck in its noblest effort, it pours forth its choicest strains of melody and dies.

It is often thus with the best endeavors of man. Hence, we as Americans, love to call to mind the farewell adderess of Washington.—That great and good man had done many great and good things for our country. All his eminent services for America, in the field and in the State, had endeared him to the hearts of his countrymen and to all the lovers of liberty throughout the civilized world. But there is something in those parting words of counsel that comes home with peculiar force and significance to the bosom of every true American. We can never forget them. Their influence has been felt in America ever since their utterance, and will continue so to be felt for all generations.

It is a remarkable circumstance in our history that the last public appeal of Lincoln was made with reference to the development of the resources of the United States. Surrounded, as he knew himself to be, by imminent dangers, aware that at any unforeseen moment he might be called to lay down his life for his country, his last words in this regard possess an extraordinary interest and an amount of importance. Lincoln loved his country as few men ever loved it, and when he had been carried along as one of the chief exponents of her destiny to that period when the wicked attempt of slavery to destroy the nation was effectually put down, his whole heart turned, with all its fondness and with all its strength, to the noble and patriotic purpose of preparing to meet the enhanced liabilities of the nation. He fixed his patriotic eye on the nation's resources, and firmly resolved that he would do all that was lawfully in his power to bring them out and apply them severally to the gradual and certain liquidation of the nation's debt. In a parting interview with Speaker Colfax, just before that gentleman left Washington on a tour of personal inspection of the Western mines, and just before his own sudden death, he said:—

"Mr. Collax, I want you to take a message from me to the miners of the West. I have very large ideas of the mineral wealth of our nation. I believe it practically inexhaustible.—We shall prove, in a very few years, that we are indeed the treasury of the world."

These are the words of counsel uttered by a departed patriot. They are especially applicable and instructive at the present moment. All eyes are again being turned to Washington; not to hear news from the War and Navy Departments; not to receive telegrams from Congress as to new measures for the overthrow of a gigantic revolt against the very existence of the nation. Those hours of peril and sacrifice are passed; we have good reason to believe passed forever. But we look to Washington now, that the measures so patriotically plead for by the martyr Lincoln may neither be forgotten nor overlooked. It is, however, for the people to bear in mind that the development of their own resources is in their own hands. The Government of the United States is but the servant of the people; and in this respect, as in every other, the people should remember that the servant is not above his master. If the country does not show its interest in developing its own resources, it cannot expect its Government will show any. It is beyond dispute that the quartz ledges of Nevada are richer than those of Ural, and more enduring in their riches than those of Ophir. In one of his messages to Congress President Lincoln says:—"It is believed that the product of the mines of precious metals in that region has, during the year 1863, reached if not exceeded, one hundred millions of dollars."

In these mountains lie at this moment abundant means for more than paying, in a few years, every dollar of our national debt. Will the people go to work and bring them out?

The Condition of the Shenandoah.

A Liverpool correspondent communicates some interesting facts about the pirate Shenandoah and the results of her career. He says the excitement upon the landing of the crew was intense, and the sailors were in such fear of imprisonment that they could neither eat nor drink until they were unconditionally released. The emblem of rebellion was hauled down and the flag of the Union run up to the mast-head by Captain T. M. Freeman. In the after saloon were found fifty-one chronometers, twenty-three sextans and quadrants, compasses, barometers, gold and silver coin, etc. Below were sixty thousand pounds of powder, fifty live shells, cannons, guns, a full set of Marryatt's signals, flags of different nations and a quantity of charts. The pirate ship was in the most filthy condition. It would seem almost impossible for humanity to have degraded itself to such a state of absolute neglect. The decks and hold were covered with garbage. The vessel must have been in an abanboned state of discipline, as common prudence would have dictated a necessity of avoiding such a stimulant to disease and disgrace. Even the cabin and saloon were in an awfully dirty state. The forecastle contained a little of everything, from a bunch of rusty keys to a geer-steering apparatus.

The ship's hull is of the composite construction; her ribs and beams of iron, covered with hard wood planks outside. Her rigging appeared taut and in good order, although in some instances the halyards were cut, the ends rough and unwound. Among her papers were found bonds, discharges, etc. Everything is in possession of the Consulate, and the ship is probably now overhauled and ready for sea.

A Big Lift—A Building Eighty by One Hundred Feet, Five Stories High, and Weighing 27,000 Tons. Lifted Two Feet from its Original Foundation.

[From the Chicago Times, November 23.]

The work of raising the iron structure on the corner of Wells and South Water streets, known as the Robbins block, is now completed, and in a day or two the sidewalks will be adjusted, and the brick foundations firmly laid, when the whole of the vast machinery used in the process of elevation will be removed.

This wonderful task was undertaken only about three weeks since by Messrs. Hollingsworth & Coughlin, contractors, it having been found necessary to raise it because of the rise of the level of South Water street by grading. It was by many considered an impossibility that such an immense mass of stone and iron, weighing, including the merchandise with which it is filled, not less than twenty-seven thousand tons, could be successfully raised, or raised at all.—The contractors, however, assumed the responsibility, confident of their ability to perform the task of elevating the entire block, without damage or fracture of any kind to the building.—Eighteen days were consumed in preparing for the work, during which period 1,550 screws and 400,000 feet of timbers were placed in position under the structure. The preliminary arrangements completed, the time occupied in the fulfilment of the work was short, occupying but three days. When the constractors entered upon the undertaking but three men were employed. After the screwing-up apparatus had been adjusted and was ready to be applied, a force of three hundred men was employed. Crouching down amidst huge beams corded up to brace the tremendous weight, wedged in almost every conceivable position, three hundred stalwart frames, with their hands upon the levers which projected from every screw head, silently awaited the signal. A single shrill whistle was heard, and simultaneously, the screws were set in motion, all working together with the utmost precision. Each screw was turned just so far, and then ensued a pause for a readjustment of the levers, when the same process was repeated.—Thus for three days the work went on, and at the end of that time, when the whole structure, 80x160 feet and five stories in height, had been elevated twenty-seven and one half inches from its original position, the supports were placed under it for the last time, the screws removed, and the work of building up the foundation commenced. All this was done without the displacement of a single brick, timber, or even the slightest marring to the building.

The structure is of iron, the iron-wall being entirely detached from the inner brick wall and at a distance of two feet from it. It is the first iron building which has ever been raised in this country, and probably the first in the world.—The total cost of the raising, including the necessary improvements, will be about $20,000.

STATE OF MARYLAND:
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

WHEREAS, By an act entitled. "An Act to secure the completion of the Maryland and Delaware Railroad Company," passed by the General Assembly of Maryland, at its January session, in the year 1865, it was provided that the lien held by the State on the property of said Road, should be waived, postponed and deferred in favor of the holders of any Bonds which it might be necessary to issue for the completion and equipment of said work, and of no other parties whatever, and not exceeding one million of dollars, the said waiver to take effect whenever a bona fide contract should be made by which the opening of no less than two-fifths of said road should be effected, said contract to be approved by the Board of Public Works, and said approval to be made known by the proclamation of the Executive.

Now, therefore, I do hereby declare and make known that a contract was executed on the 14th day of September last, by and between the said Railroad Company and a certain Charles B. Dungan, for the construction and completion of the said Railroad, upon the terms therein expressed, commencing at the Smyrna station, on the Delaware Railroad, and ending at the terminus on Third haven river, near the town of Oxford, in Maryland, which contract was, by the Board of Public Works of this State, on the 16th day of September last past, duly approved.

{SEAL.} In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State, at the city of Annapolis, this 29th day of November, in the year 1865. A. W. BRADFORD.

By the Governor:
WM. B. HILL,
