SELECT POETRY.

Shattered Hopes.
BY EFFIE ELLIS.

Standing to night in the waning light
Of lifetime's summery gloom,
I muse with tears on the fleeting years,
With their dead by mist of gloom,
My sorrow cries for the olden skies,
Seen in my childhood days,
Ere a single cloud, with vapory shroud,
Imprisoned the golden rays.

And wandering lost on the winding track,
With a slow and solemn tread,
I search in vain for the lovely train
Which around my pathway shed—
The hopes so bright whose beautiful light,
Like a tarnished golden thread,
Has lost its gleam, and the youthful dream
Is shattered, scattered, and dead.

I glide no more, as in days of yore,
Down a laughing, singing stream,
Where flowers bloom with a sweet perfume,
And the banks are brightest green,
But the surging tide is deep and wide,
And my barque in tempest tost,
And breakers roar as they beat the shore;
Like moaning spirits lost.

The billows leap to the tempest's sweep,
And I hear the shouting storm,
Flinging the spray in a maddened way
Over my shivering form;
And never a ray of light doth stray
Through the clouds of shou hae,
That I may know if the hopeful bow
Is spanning the sky of blue.

"Be still, my soul, for the blessed goal,
Of eternal peace and light
Is not for those who idly repose
Where the embers linger bright;
But the hand of God doth lift the rod
O'er the heads of those whom he
Loving, desires through refining fires
Prepared for eternity."

TWILIGHT.

Like a wearied gentle spirit,
That slowly glides away
In peace and calm contentment,
So fades the dying day.

And as the shades of evening
Are deepening all around,
He leaves his farewell kisses
Upon the dewy ground.

Far sweeter than the midnight,
Though that is sweet to me,
When the deep-toned thoughts are surging
Like the billows of the sea.

Far fairer than the noonday,
Though that be fair and bright,
Is the sweet mysterious marriage
Between the day and night.

ARMY ANECDOTE.—Army anecdotes being still in order, we give this of a zealous Chaplain of the Army of the Potomac, who called on a Colonel noted for profanity, to talk of the religious interests of his men. After politely motioning him to a seat on a chest, the following dialogue occurred—
Chaplain—Colonel, you have one of the finest regiments in the army.
Colonel—I believe so.
Chaplain—Do you think you pay sufficient attention to the religious instruction of your men?
Colonel (doubtfully)—Well, I don't know.
Chaplain—A lively interest has been awakened in the Massachusetts (a rival regiment.) The Lord has blessed the labors of his servants, and ten have been baptised.
Colonel (excitedly)—Is that so? (To the aide-de-camp.) Sergeant Major, have fifteen men detailed immediately for baptism. I'll be cussed if I'll be outdone by any Massachusetts regiment!
DILLOGUE—Dutchman—"Good morning Pat, how you tuz?"
Irishman—"The top of the morning till ye, Sam; do you think we'll get rain to-day?"
Dutchman—"Kess no; we never have mooch rain in der dry time."
Irishman—"Faith an yer right there, an' then whenever it gets in the way of raimin' the divil the much dry time will we get as long as the wet spell howlds."

☞ An ugly old bachelor, about town, whom no woman would have, being rallied on his matrimonial prospects with, "Don't despair, there are as good fish in the sea as ever was caught, you know," is said to have replied, "Yes; I know—but somehow it seems to me that they don't bite as they used to."

A man was induced to sign the pledge at Wheeling last week, by a photographer presenting him with his picture, taken in spiritual dense at the same time. It was argumentum ad hominem.

It is a curious thing that although the train keeps thousands away from church on Sunday, it does not deter a single man from attending to business on week days.

☞ Here is a "personal" advertisement in a French newspaper. "Eliza, you can return to the house, the bull on my nose has gone."

☞ A Western editor has placed over his marriage heading a cut representing a trap spring, with the motto "[illegible]—another mouse caught."

☞ Men of mark—those who can't write [illegible].

Miscellaneous.

ALL ABOUT PRINTERS.
WHAT THEY DO, HOW THEY DO IT AND WHAT THEY DO IT WITH.

The knowledge of the general public as to the details of Printing is necessarily limited, from the fact that all persons are not practical printers; and, as I know all about it, I deem it my duty to tell the public all about it, which is all I know—and more too.

I will now commence at the beginning.

The term "to print" means—well to print, as you know, which everybody understands without my explaining it.

When anything is printed it is said to be in "black and white;" but this certainly is not the case when it is printed on yellow paper with red ink.

There is also such a thing as printing a kiss on a fair girl's cheek; but that is not the kind of printing I am about to deal with. I shall treat of newspaper, book and job printing.

The man who works at the business is termed a printer.

Printing is styled the "Art Preservative of all Arts,"—for obvious reasons.

Printing was invented by Benjamin Franklin, who had learned the trade with his brother.

As in all other callings there are terms used in printing familiar only to printers—and others. These it is my object to explain.

A printer's "stand" means a stand on his feet of ten hours each day.

A printer's "case" is a suit in court to recover his wages from his employer.

The "lead" of the printer is used for molding a bullet in.

The "rule" is, that each printer abstain from strong drink from New Year's Day till the first of January. It is a rule that works both ways. It also has its exceptions, as all legitimate rules have—the exceptions are 365 days 6 hours 9 minutes and 9.7 seconds in the year.

The "imposing stone" is a stature of the editor cut out of limestone and usually set up in a dark corner of the composing room to terrify the printers. It is so named from its imposing appearance.

The "stick" is usually made of hickory, and is about three feet long with a boat handle at one end. It is closely allied to a newspaper "club."

The "brackets" are convenient articles attached to the wall for the purpose of hanging the "sticks" on.

The "comma" (,) is taken from the latin word "coma," signifying sleep. Hence it is used at intervals as a kind of brief stop when the printer wishes to rest a moment.

The "colon" (:) is a stop of sufficient length to allow him to put coal on the fire.

The "dash" is an article made of pasteboard of a shape similar to the dash on the platform of a car, and is worn over the eyes at night times to keep the strong gaslight out.

The "form" is a kind of a ceremony through which printers must go ere becoming members of the fraternity.

The "coin" is a round piece of silver, about an inch and a quarter in diameter and about a sixteenth of an inch thick.

"Pie" is the lunch which he either brings with him or takes at the restaurant.

Everybody has heard it observed that printers are paid by the thousand, but not every one knows what that means. "The thousand what?" is asked. I will explain. Each printer is paid six bus for every thousand times he sets up the alphabet in full, using every letter. I once knew an editor who took a mean advantage of his printers in this regard. He wrote eighteen years without ever using the letter 'z,' so that the poor printers had to work all that time for nothing, not having set up every letter in the alphabet. Once the mean cuss was compelled to use the word 'sheeze' in one of his editorials, and instead of writing it in the usual manner he spelled it—"s n e e-i-w n y s i x t h e-e-o-s-t h r e-l p h a-b-e-t e"—thus again avoiding a compositor's bill.

[The compositor at work on this article has been suddenly taken ill of hysterics, and being a splendid printer myself, I took his place, and proceeded to finish setting it up, first introducing the following explanatory note—merely to practice on:

Just at this point the compositor engaged in setting up this article seemed very much amazed at a humorous and 7 found it impossible longer to control his risibility and burst into loud laughter.) the faces: flying in all directions! If being a good practical printer in Yeld: T, 8 at once take his place the reader will readily prove? th2 improvement! 4 (now To proceed.

"Tha gal" ley is—a.

[At this point another printer arrives, relieving me of the onerous task, and proceeding with the composition in his own awkward style.]

The "galley" of the printer is the rear apartment of the restaurant in which he gets his meals, where the cooking is done.

A "cake" is the taking of hats at going-home time, and—

"Distributing" means scattering over the city to their different places of abode.

"Spaces" are the intervals between the different cases.

"Fat matter" is the pork market reports, always eagerly sought after by printers, because they like fat matter.

"Lean matter" is something very tedious to set up, so as to cause the printer to lean on his "stick" now and then for a moment's rest.

The types used in printing are each about two feet three inches long. They are made of finely tempered steel, so that they will not cut the printing paper.

The ink used is printer's ink.

Now, a word as to the Printer himself. The Printer in this country is always either an American or a foreigner. Sometimes he is a male and sometimes a female. He divides his time between setting up type and getting up himself. He is a self-conscious, moral, rational, intellectual being, and generally knows what is going on in the World. He sees all the telegraphic dispatches the night before, and to him the morning paper has a kind of air of yesterday about it. I could say a good deal more concerning printers and their characteristics, but cannot do so, owing to the fact that I have concluded this article.

☞ The Wabasha (Wis.) Herald, speaking of the qualifications of a candidate for the office of coroner, says, "He will sit on a corpse with more real ability and grace than any other man of our acquaintance.

☞ A man who married a particularly plump spectimen of womanhood, being asked how he was one day that she filled the measure of his matrimonial joy full, for she was beautiful, dutiful, and an armfull.

☞ One of the gentler sex says that the reason why strong-minded women are so antagonistic to grow in their proper place, and why men cease bothering and cordial are so rabbit.
