BALTIMORE.

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1862.

THE DISASTER IN HAMPTON ROADS.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser, March 11.

The telegraph, with about its average sagacity, informs the public that "naval men" at Fortress Monroe "are generally of the opinion that, considering everything, the rebels had the worst of it," in the combat of Saturday and Sunday. Such will not be the general opinion, however, either here or in Europe. It is no small thing to have destroyed a fifty-gun frigate and a heavy sloop-of-war at the first dash, to have kept steam and sailing frigates and gunboats at bay, and to have successfully defied land batteries, at the first attempt. The Confederates might well be content to draw off the Merrimac with a hole in her side, after a success which was so startling and portentous, as to call high officers of State and an expert in engineering from their beds at an unusually hour, to consider the neglected subject of harbor defence. Even in the mere matter of the immediate result, there seems to be a heavy balance in favor of the Confederates, in spite of the opportune arrival of the Monitor, which, like the rich uncle from India in the fifth act of a drama, came in to rescue the good and unfortunate and to foil the machinations of the bad. In short, we must frankly say that we see no reason why the Confederates should not write this occurrence pretty high on their list of successes.

But there is something more than this. The United States could have afforded the loss of several other antiquated wooden ships, had the Confederates failed of their present gain in reputation and spirits. Under the pressure of heavy reverses, they have been praying for some aggressive movement by their leaders, for some stroke to relieve the thick gloom of the moment. They now have what they asked for. The blow struck on Saturday was precisely one of those bold enterprises which, when successful, has an inspiriting effect upon the mass, equal to that of a victory in a pitched battle. Abroad, also, it will break the force of recent disasters, and although in its actual consequences it in no way changes the position of the contest, it still will serve to draw away attention from matters of infinitely more importance, and will throw an air of hope and strength around a sinking cause. In short, in moral effect the event is precisely what the Confederates needed.

This moral effect is the greater, because of the dash and vigor which characterise the enterprise. No one, who considers the case fairly, fails to have a sort of respect for the men who planned and carried out such an undertaking. There is a degree of gallantry and of capacity manifested in it, which deserves our admiration. The qualities which govern in such an enterprise, are those which make a Dupont or a Foote of a loyal officer. In short, the whole proceeding is one which, so far as it goes, justifies the claim laid by the Confederates for the possession of superior pluck, vivacity and swift energy. They have had a reputation of this sort, which has been of immense value to them, and by means of which they have undeniably outshone our own Government, which generally moves with deliberate momentum, irresistible, but also slow and uninspiring. This stroke recalls them to their old position in the eyes of the world, as a belligerent power that is defiant, resolute and ingenious, making up by novelty of device and swiftness of execution, for a vast disparity in material resources.

There is unhappily little to offset all this on our side. In fact there is much in the affair of which the country will surely require an explanation.—The story reads as though every one in the vicinity of Fortress Monroe was asleep on Saturday morning. On Friday the flag of truce had brought down from Norfolk intelligence that on the day before the Merrimac had her crew on board and fires lying. And yet, on the next day it would seem that the whole fleet was taken by surprise.—Nothing was at hand to meet the enemy but two helpless sailing ships, of which the larger one was but half manned; the Minnesota, supposed to be our great reliance, was not available, and in short the Merrimac had it all her own way, as much as if our fleet had not been waiting there for her for months.

Was this the best preparation that our naval authorities could make for such a case, and did they anticipate such a disaster at any time when she might choose to make her appearance, or was there neglect on the part of subordinates? The importance of these inquiries is not lessened by the fact that just at the crisis, when the Minnesota and St. Lawrence were likely to follow the Cumberland, the Monitor, the product of private enterprise, came in to turn the scale. Her arrival was what had previously occurred. Nor is the sting of our losses diminished, when it is remembered how much confidence has of late been felt in the ability of the navy to recover its old fame, and clear itself of the effects of years of inactivity and atrophy.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Special Despatches to the New York Tribune.

THE GALLANT WORDEN.

Lieutenant Wyse, of the Navy, was the first to board the Monitor after her fight with the Merrimac. Descending through the man-hole, he unexpectedly found himself in a neat parlor confronting a midshipman washing blood from his hands at a sink, and an officer combing his hair at a mirror. Lieutenant Worden laid on a sofa blind and bleeding. Recognizing Wyse by his voice, he inquired: "Have I driven off that monster?" "You have." "Then I am willing to die," said the gallant sailor. Wyse insisted on his going home with him. He is now his guest here. The President, who honors fighting men, called upon him last night, and, moved from his recent affection, and grateful to courage, and sympathetic with the wounded, burst into tears while greeting the sailor.

SLAVERY IN THE DISTRICT.

The Committee on the District of Columbia of the two Houses have agreed upon a bill for the abolition of Slavery in the District, which is substantially the same as that reported to the Senate by Mr. Morrill, of Maine. The House Committee will report at the earliest opportunity, and Mr. Morrill will to-morrow amend it as agreed. The House Committee has been equally divided until this morning, when Mr. Pendenden, of Maine, appointed in place of Mr. Upton, of Virginia, after he was unseated, turned the scale.

TRANSPORTATION ON FOREIGN SHIPS.

Senator Latham, from the Senate Military Committee, will to-morrow introduce the following bill to repeal all laws prohibiting foreign steamship companies from carrying American freight between New York and Aspinwall and Panama and San Francisco, California:

All acts prohibiting or imposing disabilities on the transportation of American freights and mails by foreign steamship companies, between New York and Aspinwall, and Panama and San Francisco, California, are hereby repealed; provided, that any steamship company so transporting freights shall carry such mails of the United States as may be delivered to them for that purpose, between the points designated, for the usual ocean postage on such mails, to be paid to such companies by the Post Office Department upon satisfactory evidence of the performance of such duty. The goods, wares and merchandise, as above provided, shall not be regarded as "foreign merchandise," but, upon being so carried from one port to another, via the Isthmus of Panama, shall be admitted free of duty; provided, that the United States Special Inspector of Customs at Panama or Aspinwall, as the case may be, shall certify that the invoices have not been changed in transitu, and that the merchandise described in them has crossed the Isthmus in unbroken packages.

A SKIRMISH.

A skirmish occurred on the 9th inst. near Fairfax Court House, between the Lincoln cavalry and Company F of the 1st Maryland Infantry. It resulted in the capture of 13 of the latter, comprising Second-lieutenant Jos. H. Stewart, Color-bear Michael McCourt, Corporal Edward P. Sheehan, and 10 privates. Stewart is a Virginian, a merchant of Alexandria. The non-commissioned officers are Irishmen, and the privates Marylanders. In the action Sheehan had his leg shattered by a pistol-ballet. McCourt received a sabre-cut on the head. It is said that one of our lieutenants, name not stated, was killed. The Secessionists did not attempt to withstand the onset of the cavalry, but broke and ran for the woods.

THE REPORTERS AND THE TELEGRAPH.

The Cairo correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, under date of March 5, writes as follows:

TELEGRAPHIC DIFFICULTIES.

We got up from Columbus about 4 o'clock P. M., and having prepared a despatch for the telegraph, I took the first opportunity to consult Col. J. J. Wilson, Superintendent of the telegraph line running from Cairo a portion of the way to Chicago, with reference to my plans for communication with the Inquirer. The result of the conference was not satisfactory to me, although his statement of the condition of affairs with him was plain and his treatment kind and courteous. The whole matter settled down to this one point immediately, Mr. Wilson saying:—"We have but one wire to do all our business over. It is a railroad wire, and our trains run by telegraph much of the time. We have an old arrangement, by which we must first accomodate the press of Chicago, St. Louis and Cincinnati. The military business of the line consumes seven-eighths of the time. We do not send any reports for the press east of Cincinnati, except it may be five or ten lines, now and then, of the most important character, which must have the signature of Major-General Halleck or General Cullum. We cannot send more than fifteen or twenty words for you at the farthest, even though General Cullum permits it. We would rather pay you a cent a word not to send any despatches, rather than that you should owe us five cents a word to send them."

GEN. CULLUM'S INTERDICT OF WAR NEWS.

A committee of reporters have been appointed to wait upon General Halleck, at St. Louis, in order that we may be treated, at least with decency; but I do not anticipate any beneficial result. It so happens that Cullum goes away for a period occasionally I am told, and when that is the case, nobody is permitted to send a despatch they contains a word with reference to the war, until he returns. He assigns as a reason for it, that none but Halleck and himself are competent to judge in the premises. The simple fact is, that so far as the announcement of a victory is concerned, he desires that the official announcement shall go forward first, and he will not permit anything to go that conflicts with the official report, nor then, until sufficient time has elapsed for his own name to be paraded first. His conduct in the whole affair so interferes with the operations of an enterprising newspaper correspondent in this section of the country, that he cannot furnish his paper with what they naturally conclude he should, without exposing himself to arrest, both as a thief and a spy.
