BALTIMORE.

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1862.

FEARS OF THE MERRIMAC IN NEW YORK.

MEETING OF THE NEW YORK CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Correspondence Philadelphia Enquirer.

NEW YORK, March 12.—The greater part of the session was devoted to the discussion of a vote of censure on Secretary Welles and the United States Navy, which was advocated by a Captain Marshall, who said that the nation had been saved from destruction by the Monitor, while the Navy, or that portion of the Navy at Fortress Monroe, were in a disgracefully inefficient condition, as was fully illustrated by the recent naval engagement. This resolution, with one in favor of sinking hulks near Norfolk to prevent the future appearance of the Merrimac, was rejected, and a motion was adopted in favor of the passage of the bill now before Congress, providing for ten additional iron-clad vessels of war. Captain Ericsson, who was present, gave a description of the naval conflict between his vessel, the Monitor, and the Merrimac, remarking that the Monitor could sink the Merrimac when she next appeared.

The statement was received with loud applause, and a number of questions were put and answered by the Captain in relation to the Monitor. "Captain," said one member, "couldn't your vessel be able to defend us here in New York, by digging a pit for it at the Narrows, or in the bay?" The Captain, however, repudiated the idea, and spoke in favor of stationary batteries, which would be twenty times more efficient than such as should float from one place to another. He then, in some effective remarks, endeavored to calm the apprehension and dispel the fears of those of the Chamber who anticipated the arrival of the Merrimac here, remarking that the Monitor would keep her blockaded and sink her whenever she dared to come forth. The announcement seemed to relieve the Chamber from a mighty load of personal and patriotic apprehension, and they were good-humored, light-hearted, and spoke valiantly afterwards.—Complimentary resolutions were then tendered to Captain Ericsson. Mr. Low, in a faint voice, not intended to reach the reporters, whispered to the President that the Government had invited a committee of the Chamber to proceed to Washington and confer with the War Department on important matters. The committee are Mayor Opdyke, Captain Marshall and Mr. A. A. Low. At this juncture, Mayor Opdyke inquired what had been done about the harbor defences, and the President replied, that was the subject which the Chamber had been convened to consider, but that the members had forgot all about it and introduced other matters. [Loud laughter.] The matter, however, was referred to the Executive Committee, a body representing the tomb of the Capulets. This concluded the business of the Chamber.

NEW YORK TO BE PROTECTED.

From the New York Tribune, March 13.

Warned by the recent occurrences at Fortress Monroe, the Government is at last taking some measures looking to a proper defence of the harbor of New York. Powder, shot and shell have been put into the forts, and yesterday the 5th regiment New York Volunteer Artillery were, by orders of Governor Morgan, sent to garrison the various forts in and about the city. Companies A, B and D, under Captains Graham, Coombs and Cotter, were sent to Fort Wood; Companies G and H, under Captains Wilkie and Sorany, to Fort Schuyler; Company E, under Captain Crane, to Fort Hamilton; Company I, under Captain McGrath, to Fort Lafayette; Company C, under Captain Emmons, to Fort Richmond. About 100 men of the Marine Artillery were also sent to Fort Richmond. The men will be carefully and assiduously drilled in the management of heavy guns. If, therefore, our readers hear loud reports in the harbor, for a few days, they need not necessarily infer that the Merrimac is coming up to the city.

A SHARP LOOK-OUT FOR THE MERRIMAC.

From the New London Register.

Colonel Gates, in command of Fort Trumbull, New London, yesterday received the following despatch from Major General McClellan:

WASHINGTON, March 9, 1862.

To Commanding Officer Fort Trumbull:

The rebel iron-clad steamer Merrimac has destroyed two of our frigates near Fortress Monroe, and finally retired last night to Craney Island. She may succeed in passing the batteries and go to sea. It is necessary that you at once place your fort in the best possible condition for defence, and add your best exertions to those already made to stop her. Anything that can be effected in the way of temporary batteries should be done at once.

Major General GEO. B. McCLELLAN,

Col. Gates immediately set to work and was attended to at Col. WM. GATES.

In a few hours the guns were uncovered and put in working order, the hot-shot house put in readiness, and the men drilled in artillery practice. The Star says the Mayor has promised the assistance of citizens to work the guns in case of necessity. The idea would seem to be that the Merrimac may seek to get to New York by way of Montauk and Long Island Sound, and hence this order to keep a bright lookout for her along our coast. Should this night craft escape through the blockading fleet, she would be the means of a vast deal of mischief to our shipping, especially in Eastern waters. "An ounce of precaution is worth a pound of cure."

A FRIGHT.

It is currently stated that a number of frightened gentlemen held a meeting on Sunday night, and called sundry distinguished merchants and large ship-owners out of their beds to advise on the best means of defending New York against the Merrimac, which was believed to be on its way to Fort Hamilton, having demolished Fortress Monroe. The Mayor, it is stated, suggested the procuring of old ships and sinking a stone fleet in the ship channel. Later news probably relieved the anxiety of the parties.—Journal of Commerce.

The panic extended to this city; for we learn that a distinguished character, with one of his aides in company, absolutely rushed three or four miles out of town to consult a gentleman of military training and professional skill—had him out of bed at 2 o'clock in the morning, to inquire what we should do, if the dreaded Merrimac should suddenly appear in our harbor! Distance, time and tide seemed not to have been taken into account at all. The answer, we learn, was not satisfactory.—Whether the gun formerly so rapturously kissed afforded any consolation on the present occasion, we have not ascertained.—Boston Courier.

From the New York Evening Post.

MASTERLY RETREATS.

While we praise the generalship and genius of Foote, Grant, Dupont, Burnside, Curtis and Seigel, and rejoice over the victories their tact and energy have gained for our cause, we are a little apt to forget or even to disparage the ability displayed by the Confederate Generals. To force your enemy to fight, and then to defeat him is one thing; to elude the trap he has set for you, and escape with all your material from superior numbers is another. Jomini, the greatest writer on the art of war, says: "Retreats are certainly the most difficult operations in war. This remark is so true that the celebrated Prince de Ligne said, in his usual piquant style, that he could not conceive how an army ever succeeded in retreating." Let us then be just to the enemy who has at three different times effected his retreat from untenable positions, without the loss of a man or a gun.

We pointed out at the time that the evacuation of Bowling Green could not be counted a victory for us. Buckner, or whoever commanded there, took away with him every great gun, every small arm, every bushel of grain and ration of provisions he possessed, and left only a beggarly account of empty storehouses and dismantled walls for General Mitchell, to whom these were not of the slightest use; and it is now known that if Pillow had held out a little longer in Donelson, the army which was suffered to leave Bowling Green with all its material, could have decided that battle against us. Again, the retreat from Columbus to Island No. 10 was conducted in a masterly manner, without severe loss, although our gunboats command the river and our armies the railroad; and Beauregard is to-day in a better position to maintain himself than he was at Columbus.

Lastly comes the evacuation of Manassas, which must figure in history as a most remarkable military achievement—even if it is not made more memorable to us by the destruction of the gallant Burnside and his little army. A gentleman of thorough military education, and who has seen service in Europe, calls it, in a letter which lies before us, "an unheard-of event in the whole history of warfare, that an army of two hundred thousand men should suffer an enemy of comparatively small numbers, encamped only thirty miles off, to slip through its fingers." The writer continues: "You should know that if this Confederate force had been caught or destroyed, that was an end to your rebellion—because, though your Confederates might get more men they could not replace the cannon and arms which they ought to have lost, and which they have now carried off with them."

This is the verdict of an impartial and competent observer. It should secure the promotion of the Confederate General who had the tact to get away, from our grasp, with all the cannon, the supplies, the immense resources gathered at Manassas, to equip the largest and most important army of the Confederates, and to lose which would have been a fatal blow to their hopes.

To fall upon and destroy the Confederate army at Manassas, would certainly have made the war "short but severe." The escape which became known only yesterday prolongs the struggle perhaps for months. Manassas was admirable as an offensive position, but useless for defence, because its communications and rear were accessible, and because the army attacking would be but thirty miles from its base of operations. In an enemy's country, railroads are useless to us; and the Potomac now before us is to advance with a great army, not thirty, but probably sixty, perhaps a hundred miles from our base, to the point where the shrewd enemy may choose to wait for us.

Meantime, we think it right to say to our readers that the fear for Burnside's safety which is so oppressively felt here, equally weighs upon the minds of high officers in Washington. It is thought by many, that a large detachment of the army of Manassas may, if it pleases, fall upon Burnside, and crush him, before reinforcements can get to him. We have only to hope that the gallant hero of Roanoke will keep in the neighborhood of his gunboat, whose fire can save him.

But even if Burnside escapes destruction, the retreat from Manassas changes the character of the campaign very seriously. The wars which should have been finished in the cool and healthy latitude of Virginia, will now be rolled southward, where the heats and malaria of summer may do for our troops what the Russian winter did for Napoleon in 1812.
