BALTIMORE.

MONDAY, MARCH 17, 1862.

THE END NOT YET.

We clip the following from an article in the New York Post of March 15, headed

FOREWARNED, FOREARMED.

The country has been called upon, day after day for more than a month, to rejoice over the glorious victories of its troops. Beginning with the battle of Mill Spring, which was won in consequence of a rapid night march of Thomas's forces through mud and sleet, and the spirited charge of the Ohio regiments—following this up by Foote's daring gunboat assault upon Fort Henry, and Grant's three days' wrestle with the powerful fortifications of Donelson, and ending with the brilliant struggle of Curtis and Siegel against the combined southwestern army, amid the fastnesses of the Ozark Mountains, we have beaten the Confederates under every variety of circumstance, and compelled them to relinquish nearly all the strong positions which they held. Almost any other people would have been driven to despair by such a series of overwhelming reverses. Nevertheless, they continue the contest, and their journals give out ominous hints of great recoveries which they soon expect to accomplish.

We quoted yesterday a passage from Davis's message of February 27th to the same effect. He said: "Notwithstanding our very limited resources, the report of the Secretary will exhibit to you a satisfactory proposition, in the prospect on and certainty of the near completion of vessels of a number and class on which we may rely for contesting the vaunted control of the enemy over our waters." This unquestionably refers to the Merrimac and other steam rams which the Confederacy had in preparation. Mr. Eliot, in a communication printed in the Evening Post of January 18th, had informed us that two of these were getting ready at New Orleans, two at Mobile, and one at Norfolk, of which he supposed the latter was the best.

On Saturday last we saw what that one could do, how our best frigates proved but cock boats before her; and how the timely arrival at Fortress Monroe of the iron-clad Monitor alone saved the harbor and the blockade. But what is to prevent the iron armadilloes at Mobile and New Orleans from doing similar damage? As far as we know, they can, the moment they are ready, disperse the blockade of both those ports, and obtain practically a command of the Gulf. We have no Monitors near those stations to arrive in the nick of time; Commodore Foote may be in New Orleans before the rams are armed; but he has two battles at least to fight before that can happen; and until then we must trust to the wooden ships, such as they are.

From the Washington National Republican, March 15.

THE GREAT FARCE—THE ENEMY AT CENTREVILLE.

Human history contains no parallel to the military performances on the Potomac, of which the finale is the bill pending in the House to impose a onerous internal tax upon the people of this country, estimated to produce one hundred millions of dollars. When the facts are all brought out and established by such evidence as is necessary to inspire belief in what is apparently so incredible, it is not merely America which will be amazed. Blundering so stupendous will receive, as it deserves, the attention of the world.

We obtained yesterday, from a most careful and reliable gentleman, for many years a member of Congress, who had just arrived here from a thorough personal inspection of Centreville and Manassas, the following accounts:

The fortifications at Centreville, (distinguished by the letters of the alphabet,) have a number of embrasures, and of wooden guns pointing terrifically through them, as stated below:

Batteries.	Embrasures.	Wooden Guns.
A	7	7
B	7	6
C	3	1
D	3	3
E	5	-
F	9	7
G	6	2
H	5	5
I	4	-
Number of embrasures		51
Number of wooden guns		31

The guns were pine logs, charred black, with truded from the embrasures.

No real guns had ever been mounted. This was the representation made by the negroes, and the appearances inside of the work prove this representation to be correct.

A negro, who had been kept at work for months by the Confederates, reports them as having said that these pine logs would answer just as well to "skeer the enemy."

Of the numbers of the Confederates, the highest estimate obtainable from the negroes, was sixty thousand men, and this was predicated upon the basis of one thousand men to a regiment, which is double the actual fact. The bulk of the Confederates were at Centreville, as appears by the huts in which they lived. Our informant says that the most intelligent person he saw thought that the number at Centreville was twenty thousand. The Confederates had had at Centreville about twenty pieces of field artillery.

The fortifications at Manassas, fire in number, had been mounted with real guns, and guns, too, of good size and description. But, of course, they were not formidable to those who kept out of their reach, and these works could easily have been passed on either flank, and their rear cutting off their communications, or, in rear, if a direct assault was not thought desirable.

But the works at Centreville were a mere sham, built only to "skeer," and most admirably serving that purpose.

It was for the nineteenth century, and for this new world, that these performances on the Potomac were reserved. The old world was too much exhausted, and former centuries had not the necessary science and money, even if they had the genius. An army nearly double that with which Louis Napoleon fought the battle of Solferino, held at bay for nobody can recollect how many weeks, by thirty-one wooden guns, is something which mankind never saw before and may never see again. Let us of the contemporary generation rejoice that it has been our pre-eminent fortune to witness it.

INTERVENTION BY ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

Correspondence New York Times.

LONDON, Feb. 25.—The battle on American affairs is to come. It will be fought on two questions—the blockade and the recognition of the Confederacy. It will be an extraordinary contest.—The Government will pretend that it does not wish to break the blockade, and is in no haste to recognize the Confederacy. Can you doubt that it is only waiting to be compelled to do both? The Whigs, it must be remembered, only hold power by sufferance. They are not strong enough for independent action. The Conservatives, under Lord Derby and D'Israeli, hold them in perpetual check, which is nearly as bad as checkmate. "Go ahead, my live'y friend," says Derby to Palmerston—"but if you don't go as we like, you go over." So the Administration is waiting for a pressure from both parties which will force them to do what they are quite ready for.

And you may suppose that your recent victories, and the prospect they give of your ability to overcome the rebellion, will be a check upon this action. Be not too sure of that. British governmental policy, in both the almost equally matched and balancing parties, is based now upon the theory of the failure and disruption of the American Union. On this ground reform is kicked out of Parliament. While America was united, prosperous and powerful, the people of England could demand to be heard in Parliament. The example of America was the stronghold of English reformers. In the secession of the South, in the civil war now raging, with all its calamities, the aristocracy of England finds a new lease of power. They have favored the rebellion from the beginning, because they hate Democracy, and dread its influence and example. Is it likely that they will see America again reunited, prosperous and happy, if they can help it?

No, sir; the despots of Europe will plant themselves upon the Declaration of Independence, and tell you that as you have once said that government depends upon the consent of the governed, you must be held to your principles. And they will never permit the severed States to reunite, or to be reunited, if they can find the means to prevent it. Persons with whom I talk, have no hesitation in declaring the animus of their Southern proclivities. "Of course," they say, "we are glad to have Democracy a failure abroad, because we fear it at home. We know it would never do in England, and we are glad to see it coming to nought in America. We are opposed to slavery, but there is no reason why we should not recognize the South with its slavery now, as well as those eighty years past. Why make any difficulty about the Southern Confederacy, any more than Spain, or Brazil, or Turkey? It is none of our business. But the success and progress of Democracy is another affair; and if we can find any excuse to help the South, it is our interest to do it."

And here is the real reason for the sympathy with the South which prevails in England, Canada and the colonies everywhere. There are individual exceptions; but it is best that the American people should know what is the actual feeling, and understand its causes.

I hear, every few days, upon very reliable authority, that the Emperor of the French has determined to intervene and break the blockade, in the interest of the manufacturers. It is true, I believe, that he has had a private interview with Mr. Slidell. I am never troubled by reports of what the Emperor will do; because he has the vice of keeping his own counsel, and I am very sure that he has not told any one his determination. When the financial question is settled—when the Roman question ceases to disturb the public mind—when some real emergency requires it, he will act. But, he will not be made the cat's paw of England, be sure of that. And he is not troubled about Democracy or extension of suffrage. He may have cotton growing in Algeria—who knows? No—the great interest opposed to the continuance of the war, commercial and political, is here in England, and I believe that nothing will be done until April, provided there be no very important movements in the conduct of the war. These might precipitate action. When the time comes, the fire will open on the blockade, the destruction of harbors, the imprisonment of British subjects, the recognition of a de facto Government, the principles of international law, and all the questions involved in the contest.
