[COMMUNICATED.]

The Proposed Tax on Tobacco--How it will Press on the Tobacco Planters.

The tax bill, as reported by the committee, is, say 3 cents per lb. on leaf tobacco, and 5 cents per lb. additional when manufactured. The production of the country estimated:

200,000 hhds. Kentucky and Georgia, 3 cents per lb., $50 per hhd.	$10,000,000
60,000 hhds. Maryland and Ohio, 3 cents per lb., $25 per hhd.	1,500,000
100,000 boxes seed leaf, 3 cents per lb., $12 per box	1,200,000
800,000 boxes manufactured tobacco, $5 per box	4,000,000
	$16,700,000

Instead of above tax, I would say, tax on manufactured:

800,000 boxes, 20 cents per lb.	$10,000,000
or—
800,000 boxes, 25 cents per lb.	20,000,000

FASHIONABLE LIFE IN PARIS.

THE SLIDELL SALON—RECEPTIONS OF EUGENIE.

Paris (Feb. 27) Correspondence of London Star.

The gayeties of the Paris season are still very monotonous. No extraordinary incident or revolution gives variety to the very fashionable salons. Mr. Slidell, it is true, will be shortly installed in what the legitim ists call la creme de la creme de la societe Parisienne. Already that delectable section of the brilliant world, in this brilliant city, has discovered that the salon of the Confederate Commissioner will be one worth attending—the more especially since it is known that Mrs. Slidell speaks French perfectly.

The Empress has effected a variety in the hours of receiving visitors that in the aristocratic circles is for the present widely adopted. Instead of having her most brilliant receptions in the evening, they now take place in the morning, and are called matinees. The ladies attend in their bonnets, and refreshments are served on trays. These entertainments have the advantage of being necessarily of very short duration, as they seldom commence before two o'clock and end before half-past three. Music is frequently resorted to as an agreeable amusement, and the prevailing tone is easier than that of the soirees at the Tuileries.

A diplomatic reception took place a few mornings ago at the hotel of Madame Delangery, where, the ladies maliciously say, takes particular delight in asking there the reigning belles while the sun is up, for the purpose of contrasting her healthy bloom with cheeks that look better, because more delicate than her own, by gas, but not by daylight. Madame Godoz, a Brazilian, and a young Neapolitan countess, who wears Italian tri-colored bouquets and bonnet-strings, were not, however, put to shame by the strong sunshine which darts through windows with a southern aspect. The former possesses all the indolent beauty that flourishes in the warm latitudes of the Western Hemisphere, and the latter the splendid tumes and vivacity of Southern Europe, which is never so lovely as under the influence of strong emotion.

Madame Corvaia, the wife of a Spanish-American charge d'affaires, gave a ball a few nights ago, at which were present all the official world, and the elite of the Spanish-American residents or visitors now in Paris. About seven hundred invitations were issued and accepted. The invitations were printed in the simple form now so fashionable; and, but for the long notice that was given, could have hardly prepared the invited for the splendid fete that awaited them. To three magnificent salons was added a temporary gallery, at least seventy feet long, arranged like a tropical garden, although the flowers were from every hemisphere and climate. They were so arranged as to rise from a green carpet-bed flower in tall clumps and bouquets. In the midst of the former were fountains, with tiny jets of gas inside the falling water. The walls were covered with lights arranged like suns and constellations, and mirrors in the Renaissance style, so disposed as to make the suite of rooms look about three times as long as they really are.

A billiard-room of unusually large dimensions was appropriated to the buffet, which was so arranged as to appear like a vast gilded basket, in the midst of which were flowers, wild, scented, tropical and garden, forming a vast pyramidal cluster. The walls, windows, doors, and everything approaching the right angle were carefully concealed by hangings of blue velvet, and white and yellow muslin bouillonnee, and spotted with silver. They descended from a gigantic star in the centre of the ceiling and gave to this refreshment room the aspect of a pavilion in which the fairy queen might have held her revels. The refreshments were all served in Dresden glass and the most delicate porcelain of Sevres, and supper was not announced till three o'clock in the morning.

The entire personnel of the Persian Legation attended in their national costumes; and all the ministers of the South American republics, as well as several European ambassadors accredited to the Tuileries. A Persian attache waltzed and danced every dance now fashionable with a Peruvian beauty, who, some Frenchmen declared, might have sat for the portrait of one of the ladies fair in the "Keepsake de Thomas Moore," mistaking, probably, the Irish poet for Mr. Charles Heath.

Paris (Feb. 27) Correspondence of London Post.

Mr. Dayton, the American Minister, gave a ball at his house in the Rue Jean Goujon, on the occasion of the anniversary of the birth of Washington. It was attended by some of the leading fashionables in Paris.

Mr. Slidell, the Envoy from the South, not to be behindhand with the diplomatic statesman of the North, entertains most hospitably in the Avenue des Champs Elysees. His lady is highly accomplished, and distinguished for her conversational talent and agreeable manners. The salon of the prisoner of the Trent has become one of the most fashionable rendezvous of the gay world.

This being the last week before the end of the carnival, there has been a succession of balls, concerts and parties. Even the Faubourg St. Germain, that has hitherto kept so much aloof, was enlivened by the brilliant fetes that have followed one upon the other. The Marquis de Talhouet Roy, the Baronne de Mayendorff, the Duchesse Pozzo di Borgo, the Duchesse de Broglie, the Duchesse de Maille, La Marquise de Pomeren and Count Walewski, have opened their salons and found them crowded with all that Paris has of distinction. Last evening a bal masque was given by Count Walewski, at which the Emperor and Empress were present, together with the elite of French society, and the most distinguished foreigners now in Paris.

Tuesday next, however, is the last day upon which the aristocratic world will be brought together. The bals masques at the Opera have been by no means in fashion this year. Each succeeding season seems to diminish the attraction of these once celebrated reunions of the gay and happy.—They seldom collect together any of the class of persons who used to give a charm to the scene.—They now have little to recommend them but the excellent music which Strauss continues to preside over.

INTERVENTION AGAIN FORESHADOWED.

From Wilmer & Smith's European Times, March 1.

Mr. Adams made a speech which contains an admirable summary of Washington's career and the moral which it points, bearing, as the speaker skillfully made it do, on the present position of affairs on the other side of the Atlantic. But it is worthy of notice that this appreciation of America's greatest historical personage is not confined to the Federals; the opposing party draw from the hero's reverses and success exactly the same comforting assurance to sustain them in the struggle in which they are engaged. For instance, when the American Minister spoke of the Fabian policy of Washington, "content to take the command of an army, he found himself burdened with the task of creating one, without money, and with very slight provision of all the indispensable munitions of war, and this in the face of an enemy abundantly provided with all these things,"—the picture which it presents is more applicable to Mr. Jefferson Davis than to Mr. Lincoln. * * * * The speech of the American Minister breathed, it is needless to say, the same determination to put down and suppress the revolt of the South which we see reflected in every movement of Mr. Lincoln's Government. Whether these gigantic efforts will be crowned with success or end in failure, a short time must determine. The struggle is about to begin in earnest, and must terminate between March and May. We enter this day on the first of those months, and the next few weeks will be the most important in the history of the United States that have occured since the States wrested their independence from the grasp of George the Third. Washington's great experiment, which has worked such extraordinary results during the last three quarters of a century, will have to pass in the next ninety days through the severest ordeal to which it has ever been subjected. If the North cannot subjugate the South in this brief time, which is very unlikely, it is almost morally certain that the European Powers will step in and propose terms, and in mercy to all parties—to the famishing operatives of England and France, as well as to the combatants themselves, the act will be real humanity.

A new system of telegraphy has been submitted to the Emperor of France, to which the inventor, M. Caselli, has given the name of "Spantelegraph."—This telegraph has been already worked at Florence and Leghorn. It transmits autographs, messages and drawings with all the perfections and defects of the originals. An inhabitant of Leghorn sent four lines from Dante, and they appeared in the same handwriting at Florence. A portrait of the same poet was painted at Leghorn, and it was reproduced at Florence, line for line and shade for shade. A bill of exchange was drawn in the same manner, and its authenticity admitted.

A great scandal has been attracting general attention to Adrianople. Monsieugneur Lstitza de Demotico was accused of having beaten to death a girl 15 years of age, for refusing to marry a man whose pretensions were favored by her friends.—He has just been acquitted of the capital offence, but has been found guilty of having employed violent and unjustifiable means to force on the marriage; this, too, for a sum of 500 piastres received from the rejected lover. Such is the price paid for securing the good offices of a bishop in that country! Great efforts are being made to save him from exile, which the sentence imposes.
