WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 1862.

EXTRAVAGANCE AND CORRUPTION.

The Republican party has been in power for one year, and during a period in the history of this Government and under circumstances administration demanded the most rigid economy. The reverse has been the fact. Extravagance and corruption, to a degree unparalleled, has characterized the Republican Administration, and that, too, with the silent acquiescence of the people, none the less remarkable for the enormity of the abuses which should be received an overwhelming rebuke.—The corruptions in army and navy contracts, winked at if not participated in by high Government officials, and the party and personal favoritism which has been exhibited in the distribution of public patronage, are almost incredible. Instead of being diminished, as sound policy and patriotism demanded, the ordinary expenses of the Government have been largely increased. In the State Department alone, some three hundred thousand dollars additional appropriations are asked for, the necessity for which has been created solely to make paying places for party favorites. In the Dead Letter Department of the Post-office some twenty-five additional clerks have been employed, for the reason we have stated, when it is known that the business of that branch of the public service has been diminished. There is, also, a scheme on foot to create the office of Assistant Secretary for the Interior Department, and at a time too when its business is less than at any time since it was organized. Some fifty Assistant Paymasters have been appointed in the volunteer service, a fat paying office, when one-quarter of the number is more than can be employed. And we could fill columns in enumerating similar abuses, if the exposition was necessary, or would be of any avail in correcting the evil and purifying the administration of the Government.

Notwithstanding these undenied and undeniable extravagances and corruptions of the Republican Administration, which are adding rapidly to the public debt and public burdens of the country, we are told by Republicans and their sympathisers, who claim to be intensely loyal and patriotic, that these abuses must be suffered until it is demonstrated that we have "a country—a Government." It makes a great difference where one is gored. If similar abuses had been practised under a Democratic Administration, even if the circumstances of the country had been exactly similar to what they now are, the Republicans would have denounced the party and its representatives most boisterously and bitterly, as it would be right they should do.—There is no apology for official corruption at any time, but least of all when the Government is struggling, as it now is, to preserve its integrity. This apparent indifference to the shameful and wicked abuses which have been practised by the party in power, as though they were the legitimate fruits of a political victory, cannot long continue. It will be evidence of public demoralization if any party, if any Administration, can stand up under the load of corruption and reckless extravagance which will inevitably be fastened upon the Republican party and the Republican Administration.

FROM THE ADVANCE COLUMN.

From the New York World's Special Correspondent.

Two Miles Below Manassas, Va., March 14.—Your correspondent flatters himself that he is, at this present writing, unquestionably "in the advance." Yesterday afternoon I left Manassas on a scouting expedition, solus; rode through all the deserted Confederate camps in the neighborhood, taking observations and overhauling plunder, and returned to the house where I am now quartered, tired, hungry, and heavily laden with confiscations, an inventory of which would include a heavy musket, a copper bugle, a sergeant's sword, and a couple of Arkansas cleavers (fancifully called "bowie knives") of the longest, broadest, and heaviest kind; these, of course, besides interesting letters and numerous small traps. Thus burdened, I was let in and hospitably entertained at the house where I am still stopping this morning. I now learn that the "Confederate" cavalry scouts came on Wednesday within three miles of this point; but there can be no apprehensions now, for the nearest Confederate soldiers are ten miles off.

General French's brigade of New York and Pennsylvania troops moved this morning from their camping grounds near Union Mills, and came up the Alexandria and Orange Railroad to Manassas. The Harris cavalry and a company of Lincoln cavalry were here before them, and the latter made an extensive scout yesterday.

The once respectable village of Manassas is now a dreary waste of ashes. Where fifty decent houses were a week ago there are not now more than five of the most indifferent. The depot and two good hotels are among the ruins, and are still smoking. The torch was applied on Sunday. All the indications are that the destruction was meant to be complete. Yet, in spite of the desperation which tried to leave nothing but barrenness to the "thirlings," barracks, tools, weapons, and provisions in large quantities have escaped the fire. The field is being ransacked by trophy-hunters, and a few quixotic-looking Yankees, fantastically ornamented, are drifting back toward Washington. One thing seems significant: Tracts and religious books are plenty, and soiled and mutilated testaments are scattered thickly everywhere; but not a plug of tobacco or a drop of whiskey was left behind.

Contrabands are coming every hour within our lines here, seeking protection, sustenance, and freedom, all at once, and deserters from the retreating army are almost as numerous. They unite in representing the Confederates as disheartened and bewildered by the prospects already, but determined on making a stand at Gordonsville, beyond the Rappahannock.

A charred car and ruined locomotive still remain upon the dismantled railroad here at Manassas, and bridges are burned on both the roads that form a junction here. The track is being ironed where the rails are gone, and the bridges all along the Orange and Alexandria road are being re-built, and it is supposed that the trains which run to Fairfax now will be through to Manassas next week.

A short and broken monument stands on the Bull Run battle-field over the remains of General Bee, with a defiant epitaph; and there is another boxed up on the ground where the depot was, said to have been intended for the spot where General Bartow fell.

The Lincoln cavalry have gone forward and taken possession of Brentsville, a shabby little town four or five miles west of Manassas, that rejoices in being the county seat of this county of Prince William. They were summoned by the baker's dozen, who call themselves its "population," to keep the Confederates from burning the court-house.

Other brigades will come up to-day from Centreville, and the cavalry will go forward.

From the Cairo Correspondent of the New York World.

THE MISSISSIPPI FLOTILLA.

We have already given a detailed description of the Western gunboat fleet, and therefore confine ourselves, in this connection, to a list of the boats attached to the present expedition, with their commanders, guns and power. They are as follows:

| Boats. | Commanders. | Horse Power | Guns. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Benton | Capt. Stewart | 1,000 | 18 |
| Louisville | Capt. Dove | 500 | 15 |
| Cincinnati | Capt. Stemble | 500 | 15 |
| Carondelet | Capt. Walke | 500 | 15 |
| Conestoga | Capt. Phelps | 500 | 15 |
| Pittsburgh | Capt. —— | 500 | 11 |
| St. Louis | Capt. Paulding | 500 | 15 |
| Mound City | Capt. —— | 500 | 15 |
| Total number of guns | | | 110 |

THE MORTAR FLEET.

The whole number of mortar boats is thirty-eight, of which eight are attached to the fleet now on the way down the Mississippi. These boats, or barges, are constructed of heavy timber. The barges are eighty feet in length, square at the ends, so that they can be connected and form a substantial pontoon bridge. A structure of boiler iron, eight feet high, open at the top, has been placed on the deck. This inclosure, occupying the greater portion of the deck, is pierced at intervals for riflemen, and sliding doors are provided for passing from one boat to the other. These boats are to be mounted by one immense seacoast mortar each.—Twelve of the mortars have arrived, and are ready to be placed on board. The rest, it is said, are on their way here. The mortars look like an enormous and disproportioned gun sawed off at the trunnions. The bore of the shell is ten inches; the diameter of the mortar three feet. The range is said to be effective at three miles.

MR. J. WILKES BOOTH.—This talented young Baltimorean made his first appearance in New York on Monday night, which is thus referred to by the Herald:

The play last evening was Shakespeare's Richard the Third, in which Mr. J. Wilkes Booth made his debut, and Mrs. Farren her re entree, before a New York audience. Mr. Booth undertook no small task when he attempted to act a character in which his father was famous, and which his brother Edwin plays so well; but the result justifies the undertaking. As Edwin, in face, form, voice and style, resembles the great elder Booth, so the debutant last evening is almost a fac simile of Edwin, and in the first three acts of the play these brothers could no more be distinguished than the two Dromios. But in the fourth and fifth acts J. Wilkes Booth is more like his father than his brother. He reads the play capitally, and makes all the well-known points with ample effect. But in the last act he created a veritable sensation. His face blackened and smeared with blood, he seemed Richard himself, and his combat with Richmond (Mr. Tilton) was a masterpiece. An audience packed and crammed beyond the usual limits of the theatre applauded him to the echo. Mr. Booth has had much experience in the provinces, and his conception and rendition are most mature, his self-possession extraordinary. He was excellently supported, especially by Mrs. Farren, who played Queen Elizabeth capitally. The play was well put upon the stage, and the auxiliaries and accessories well managed. Schiller's Robbers is announced in preparation; but, if properly appreciated, Mr. Booth's Richard the Third ought to crowd the theatre for a month.

Two hundred thousand barrels of ale are manufactured annually in the city of Albany. Under the new tax law that city will pay on this article alone two hundred thousand dollars a year.
