THE INJURY TO THE MINNESOTA.

Ebenezer Thompson, ship's carpenter of the Minnesota, reports the following injuries received by the vessel:

In obedience to your order of this date, I submit the following report of damages sustained by this ship in hull, spars, and boats, in the engagement on the 8th and 9th instant with the Rebel steamers Merrimac, Yorktown and one other, name unknown. Port side received one shell on after quarter at the water line, which cut through the planking; one shell between main and mizzen rigging, below airport line, which passed through Chief Engineer's stateroom, crossing and tearing up the deck over the cockpit, and striking the clamp and knee in Carpenter's stateroom, where it exploded, carrying away the beam clamp and knee, and completely demolishing the bulkheads, setting fire to the same and ripping up the deck. One shell passed through hammock netting abaft the main rigging, striking the spar deck on starboard side, cutting through four planks, then richochetting, carrying away truck and axle of gun carriage and wounding waterways. Two shells passed through No. 8 port, carrying away planking, timbers and deck clamps, and splintering several beams and castings. One shell passed through forward part of No. 6 port, carrying away planking timber and upper sill. One shell under fore rigging, which cut away sheet cable, penetrating planking timber and splintering deck clamps. One shell on starboard side carried away hammock nettings and gangway boards. There are several wounds on port side received from fragments of exploding shell. One shell passed through the mainmast fourteen feet above deck, cutting away one third of the mast and bursting some of the iron bands. One shell struck the spar deck in starboard gangway, cutting it up. One passed from port to starboard gangway, forward of mainmast, where it exploded, wounding two boats.

CHARLES N. HORNER, Gunner.

DECEASE OF AN OLD WHALEMAN.—The Nantucket Inquirer gives the following account of Capt. Paul West, recently deceased in that town at the advanced age of 84 years:

Captain West was born during the Revolution and was brought up as many prominent men have been, in a severe school. He first was cook and cabin boy of these little Nantucket whalers which went out on short cruises of six weeks, where the fare was hard and the exposure far worse than the boys of these times could endure. In 1793 he made his first voyage to the South Seas. In 1796 he sailed for the Pacific ocean in the ship Maria, which was fitted from Nantucket by Wm. Rotch, and his son Samuel Redman, since of New Bedford. On that voyage the Maria was commanded by Benjamin Paddack, Hezekiah Barnard being his mate, and our prominent fellow-citizen, Peter Paddack, one of the boat-steerers. On his arrival from that voyage of little more than a year, he received for his share five hundred dollars. In 1798 Captain West, then a mere boy, went to Europe and sailed in the ship Cyrus, Captain Archibald Hammond, the man who killed the first sperm whale in the Pacific ocean, and was taken into Delago Bay by the English. On his return as a prisoner, he was retaken by the French and lodged in a French prison, from which he was released by the exertions of Captain Wm. Moores, of Nantucket, then residing in France. The Cyrus having arrived in London a prize, was sold, and the parties purchasing, invited Mr. West to take charge of her for a whaling voyage.

Captain West sailed in her two voyages to the Pacific, and one to the South Seas in the English ship Charleston, and returned home in 1812 with a fortune. During his voyages, oil was at a high price, and the English captains took half as their share, and paid the crew from their proportion. By the English system of apprenticeship, this caused but little to be paid out, so the masters grew rich in a few voyages. Since his arrival home in 1812, he has done but little active business. He has been for fifty years a principal director in the Pacific Bank and in the Insurance Companies that have been established here. He has ever been a most methodical man. Everything connected with his affairs has been exact to a fault. His house and grounds, the rare pattern of his dress, and all things arranged with perfect system. He never filled a check away from his check book at home, and when filled, always cut it out after the fashion of a "Mediterranean Pass," so that it could be fitted on if necessary, when returned. His integrity has always been remarkable, and in the changes which have taken place her in the monied institutions, not a shadow of doubt or a word of censure ever attached to him. He lived to a good old age, happy and contented in the enjoyment of health and fortune, and although we have all been aware that he must soon be called hence, yet many will regret that he has gone from among us.

A JOCULAR EPISTLE FROM GENERAL BUCKNER.—The rebel General Buckner has written the following letter from his headquarters at Fort Warren, to the editors of the Louisville Journal:

FORT WARREN, MASS., March 4, 1862.

Gentlemen:—Amongst other luxuries of which I have been deprived since my imprisonment, is the pleasure of perusing those chaste and refreshing notices with which, for some time past, your paper has honored me, and although in my progress through the North I have met with many attempts on the part of the press at an imitation of your peculiarly felicitous style of misrepresentation, I have found none to equal the original. I am therefore under the necessity of applying to the fountain-head. I enclose two dollars, for which please send me your country daily, to the following address:

GEN. S. B. BUCKNER,
Care of Col. J. Dimick,
Fort Warren, Mass.

P. S.—Since writing the above, our friend, Col. R. W. Hanson, has reached this celebrated resort, and desires me to add that the present of a demijohn of whiskey which he learns you have promised him would never be more acceptable than at this time—the locality and the latitude, as well as the sentiments of our neighbors up the harbor, holding out most tempting inducements to cultivate a taste for that delightful beverage. As a matter of caution, however, he urges me to add that he hopes, if the liquor be of good quality, you will not venture to taste it, as he might thereby incur much risk in losing it altogether—a privation which, however agreeable to yourself, would be attended with serious inconvenience to himself during the prevalence of the prevailing "nor'easters."

BLOCKADE OF THE RIO GRANDE.—Through Havana comes the news that the mouth of the Rio Grande is vigilantly blockaded by the sloop-of-war Portsmouth. The right to close a river dividing our own from the Mexican Republic, may not be literally sustainable; but there is every reason to believe the exercise of a reasonable surveillance will not be objectionable to the Government of Mexico, or to that of any State preserving friendly relations with the United States. What is accomplished by a coast-guard at that particular point is not only a check upon intercourse between Texas and Cuba by way of Matamoras and Brownsville, but a demonstration that neither France nor England is covertly nullifying the blockade by encouraging the shipment of Southern produce to Europe through Mexico. Thus justice is done to all parties, including the Confederates, who alone suffer. Their afflictions are, however, only for a season.—A few weeks and the blockade will be raised.—New York Times.

BROWSING AROUND.—The story is too good to keep, and though we suspect it may be slightly embellished, we tell it: A party of gentlemen, among whom was a Doctor of Divinity of great comeliness of manner and elegance of address, some months since called at the White House, to pay their respects to the President. On inquiring for that dignitary, the servant informed them that the President was at dinner, but he would present their cards. The doctor demurred to this, saying they would not disturb Mr. Lincoln, but would call again. Michael persisted in assuring them it would make no difference to the President, and bolted in with the cards. In a few minutes the President walked into the room, with a kindly salutation, and a request that the friends would take seats. The doctor expressed his regret that their visit was so ill-timed, and that His Excellency was disturbed while at dinner. "Oh! no consequence at all," said the good-natured Mr. Lincoln; "Mrs. Lincoln is absent at present, and when she is away, I generally browse round."—New Bedford Mercury.

THE GREAT BATES SUIT.—It is well known that George C. Bates, late of Detroit, Michigan, some time since commenced a suit against the Illinois Central Railroad Company, about the possession of the land—valued at $2,000,000—upon which the great Union depot at Chicago stands. The prosecution by Mr. Bates was regarded by many as an Utopian scheme, for, when powerful corporations contend with a single individual, they generally come out ahead; but he steadily persevered, and the case has been carried up from one Court to another until it finally reached the Supreme Court of the United States, where it was decided—we learn from Washington—on Monday in favor of the company.

The British Government have, at the instance of the British Consul here, awarded to Capt. C. A. Homans, of the Nereus, a highly finished telescope, as an appreciation of his courage and humane treatment of the rescued crew of the schooner Paradise, of Halifax, as also a pecuniary reward to the mates and seamen, besides paying the damage done by staving in of the life-boat.

The amount to be raised by taxation in Philadelphia the coming year, in addition to the ordinary receipts, is nearly $3,000,000. To raise this amount, there is real and personal property to the value of $148,893,154. The rate of tax will be either $2.05 on the $100, or $2.15.

The gas in a coal pit on Saw Mill Run, above Temperanceville, Pa., took fire on Monday morning, from the lamps of the miners, causing a terrible explosion, which killed two men, fatally wounded a third, and seriously burned several others.

A GOVERNMENT CONTRACTOR FOR FORT LAFAYETTE.—Mr. Almy, the agent for the State of Connecticut in New York city, reports that his attention was called on Tuesday last to the water-casks which were furnished by a certain contractor for the ship City of New York, on board of which the 13th Connecticut regiment are to sail from New York. They were all oil-casks in a filthy condition which would have rendered the water putrid in a short time—and thus be instrumental in injuring the health of, if not poisoning, the troops. Mr. Almy took immediate steps to have the contractor arrested and confined in Fort Lafayette.—Hartford Courant.
