CENSORSHIP OF THE TELEGRAPH.

The House Committee on the Judiciary yesterday made a report which casts deserved censure on the way in which the telegraph has been managed. They take the very just ground that military and naval intelligence of a character calculated to furnish information to the Confederates is the only kind of news which should ever be suppressed; but they state that owing to the blundering incompetency of the persons intrusted with the censorship, or from some other cause, the whole business has been shockingly mismanaged, and despatches suppressed which would have conveyed perfectly proper and harmless information.

We are not repeating the language of the committee, but stating the substance of their report as we understand it. They make the reasonable criticism that no adequate measures have been adopted to prevent the transmission of so-called contraband intelligence through the offices at Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and other important places, while almost everything was excluded from the wires in Washington. Despatches almost numberless of a political, personal, and general character have been suppressed by the censor; and although the committee do not find many despatches reflecting on members of the Cabinet and other civil officers among those suppressed, they say that the witnesses examined explain this by stating that they seldom prepared such despatches, as they understood that they would not be permitted to send them over the wires.

The general views and conclusions of the committee are undoubtedly correct; but it is possible that the facts they report may have been somewhat colored by the prejudices of the witnesses. It does not appear that they examined Secretary Seward, who, they say, controlled the censorship, and who is, therefore, by implication, held responsible for its mismanagement. Had they taken the testimony of so important a witness, whatever of exaggeration or false coloring there may be in the averments of the reporters and telegraphers, would have been corrected, and the report of the committee would be free from any suspicion of having been founded on ex parte statements. But taking their report as it stands, it shows that the freedom of the press has been unwarrantably interfered with.

MR. J. WILKES BOOTH.

From the New York Tribune, March 21.

RICHARD III.—The old Wallack's Theatre, Broadway and Broome street, is now offering tragedy and dramas generally, Mr. J. Wilkes Booth, an actor entirely new to the New York stage, but where family name is so theatrically renowned, doing the chief characters. Mr. J. W. Booth is the son of the eminent tragedian of the past generation, and the younger brother of Mr. Edwin Booth, who has lately been acting in England. He bears a most striking resemblance to his brother, being however of a taller and heavier build. He has a fine impressive face, which is also distinguishable in its likeness to his celebrated progenitor.

The Richards Third of this time are based on those of Cooke and the elder Kean, the first Booth following the traditions and the seconds going in the same lines generally. The chief points indeed seem all stereotyped, so much is one actor mechanically like another in the character; but then, of course, the varieties are as great as those of physical differences and grades of intellectual apprehension. The Cooke-Kean school had many virtues and many faults. People now deep in the winter of their days say that after the Cooke of their young lustres, they cannot be satisfied with tragedians; and the reason chiefly given was the wonderful melody of his voice, so powerful, so changeable, so sympathetic. His face moreover was magnificently marked in its outlines and capabilities. Edmund Kean, while making a great success in this country was vehemently criticised, among others, by the celebrated Robert Walsn, for his affectations and errors; but still left an enormous reputation among old playgoers here. The first Booth, an Englishman, appeared originally in London, but tradition states that he was too much like Kean to remain. He came to the United States and acted here exclusively for many years, living near Baltimore. His children are American-born. His mobility of face is spoken of as something wonderful, and his exasperations of passion carried the audience with him. Added to this, an eye of immense power was among his means.

In the performance of Mr. J. Wilkes Booth, we cannot say we detected anything absolutely new, not even the soiled buff gauntlets; for report says that George Frederick Cooke wore very soiled ones. We did not find in Mr. J. W. Booth a wonderfully-gifted voice; though, it must be added, he was said to be laboring under a cold. But we would remark that there is not one voice in a million which can stand the huge straining of Anglo-American tempests of tragic wrath, when the actor grows purple with effort, and all the delicate tissues of the vocal chords are jangled into a state of physical desperation. The result is that the voice is rough, dead, and ghastly, in nine-tenths of the scenes of the performance, or those demanding the more subtle, philosophical, endearing and natural traits. If there be any exception to this, among our most intense tragedians, we have not encountered it.

We think Mr. J. W. Booth has great natural gifts for the stage, and an amount of intellectual breadth in one so young that is most remarkable. We apprehend that he is all the better for not having grown into the boards, so to speak; for he is not amenable to the charge of pompous diction and laboriously unnatural sounds. He properly makes Richard III. a rough brute, and appears to have mastered especially the rude laconism which Shakespeare puts in the tyrant's mouth; for he never drawls, but goes on quickly and conversationally always as regards time. The diction of the play is almost, every line, as fresh as if written yesterday, and to a player who understands the art of making talk and action vital, offers supreme advantages as a tragedy.

We cannot speak of Mr. J. W. Booth except in his Richard III.; and that does not demand grace of gesture or majesty of walk. It argued finely for the perception of the young tragedian that he affected neither the one nor the other, but simply the hunchback, shambling Richard. Among the peculiarities of Mr. J. W. Booth which we do not admire is, in cunning expressions, that of shutting one eye. Now that is exclusively Milesian and comic. Another is, an occasional speaking through the nose; not a nasal twang, but as if he had a cold.—Mr. Edwin Booth does the same thing. A third is a habit when contemplating, of half-clenching his hand and regarding his finger-nails. This is also a fraternal habit; and we presume is inherited, for those things come down through generations as much as form of body, or color of eyes or hair.

Mr. J. W. Booth is a head and shoulders above those who ordinarily attempt Richard III. in intellectual breadth and power of concentration. If he would husband his voice a little more in the raving parts, we think the average would be improved.—But at all events, he is terribly in earnest as Richard. His death scene was absolutely lion-hearted. All the old traditions regarding it—of fighting standing or prostrate, returning to the charge, dealing swashing blows, and dying game—he exhibits with vast force. He was called before the curtain by the general applause of a full house.

FROM PORT ROYAL.

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

BUTLER TURNED UP AGAIN—THE STEAMER MISSISSIPPI BADLY DAMAGED.

A week ago General Butler made his appearance at this place, very much to his own dissatisfaction and our surprise. The Mississippi, which was conveying him and a portion of his reinforcements, ran ashore on Frying-Pan Shoals, off the coast of North Carolina, and was so much injured as to be obliged to put in here two days subsequently. She lies at Seabrook, some six miles off the Port Royal river, on this island, and her troops are encamped there. The Mississippi cannot be got ready for sea without much overhauling, and General Sherman has sent General Butler the Matanzas, which will transport him, with a portion of his troops, to their destination; the others will follow speedily, either in the Star of the South or the Atlantic.

THE ABOLITIONISTS READY FOR THEIR WORK.

Mr. Edward L. Pierce, with fifty assistants, arrived here by the Atlantic last week, to assume control of the negroes in this command. Among those who accompanied him are a dozen or more young ladies, who will act as teachers. Mr. Pierce is to be general superintendent, and the Rev. Mr. French will supervise the religious and educational training of the blacks. The headquarters of this party will be at Beaufort. Most of its members are said to be violent Abolitionists, and openly to proclaim that they will preach emancipation to the slaves, as well as the doctrine that every black has a right to arm himself, and incite his fellows to a servile insurrection. If this be so, Gen. Stevens, in whose command they are established, will have agreeable neighbors. He, it will be remembered, was the chairman of the Breckinridge Democratic Committee, little more than a year ago, and though now demonstrating his patriotism by fighting the enemies of his country in the field, believes that he is fighting for the Constitution.

FROM THE LOWER POTOMAC.

Correspondence PHila. Inquirer.

THE EVACUATION OF AQUIA CREEK.

The evacuation of Aquia and Potomac Creek batteries took place on Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning.

Com. Magraw, of the lower flotilla, on seeing the Confederates burning the buildings at Aquia, sent two of his gunboats to prevent if possible the destruction of the works. They fired shell into the depot and buildings, but the dock fell a prey to the conflagration, and several houses belonging to parties known as neutrals were destroyed. Five white men and twenty-one negroes came over last night.

The white men belong to Fredericksburg. They report that the troops at Fredericksburg are leaving very fast. The foundations or pins at each end of the railroad bridge over the Rappahannock have been removed preparatory to its destruction.

THE CONFEDERATES FALLING BACK.

General Walker, the commander at Fredericksburg, stated to the citizens of that place that the movement of troops from there was to spare the inhabitants in case of attack. The impression prevails at Fredericksburg that the troops were falling back to Richmond.

Captain Anderson, who is a resident of Fredericksburg, arrived at Fredericksburg from Richmond two hours before Nolan started to come over. Anderson stated that large bodies of troops were going down the James and York rivers to Yorktown and Norfolk, also by railroad through Petersburg to Norfolk. Confederate money was offered in Fredericksburg for twenty-five cents on a dollar, for gold.

THE WOUNDED CONFEDERATES IN THE St. LOUIS HOSPITALS.—A private letter, dated St. Louis, March 15, received here to-day, states that the wounded Confederates who were sent to St. Louis have been quartered in the government hospitals and are treated in every respect like our own wounded soldiers.

A young Confederate officer said the South hoped this war would never end, adding that his father, a planter in Alabama, was worth millions of dollars, and that "the would expend every cent he had before he would surrender." An old Confederate officer refused to participate in the conversation, and, compressing his lips, declined to be comforted.

A drummer boy in the agony of death having been asked where he was from, replied that his mother had sent him from Mississippi "to fight and defend her home," and that "he did not regret it, and was ready to do it again." He wanted to see his mother, and said, "My mother is a good woman, too; she would treat a poor sick prisoner kindly, and if she were here she would kiss me." "I will kiss you, my child," said a lady, "for your mother," and she did so. The child was already at the last gasp, and in a few moments he expired.—New York Post.

Have introduced their style of HATS for Gentlemen for the Spring of 1862, and command it to their friends and the public, for its artistic proportions and its adaptation to the season.

They also have on hand an excellent assortment of Men's and Boys' SOFT HATS and CAPS of the most recent patterns.

They solicit a continuance of the liberal patronage which the public has hitherto extended to their establishment.
