JEFFERSON AND SLAVERY.

Editors Maryland News Sheet:

GENTLEMEN:—In the Atlantic Monthly, for January, 1862, will be found an article entitled "Jefferson and Slavery," in which, after characterizing Jefferson's remarks on "geographical lines" as the complex result of old age, vexation, poverty and the encroachments of disease, [page 39,] the writer proceeds to say:

"The opinion expressed by Jefferson at the same period," [namely, in 1817-'21, the period of the Missouri struggle,] "that the General Government cannot interfere with slavery in the States, all our parties now accept—as a peace policy; but if we are forced into an opposite war policy, let our generals remember Jefferson's declaration as to the taking of his slaves by Cornwallis: 'Had this been to give them their freedom, he would have done right.'"—[Writer's italics.]

Passing over both the spirit evinced by these few last lines, and the attempt to mislead the common mind by imposing a forced meaning through a false analogy, let us turn to the "Memoirs of Jefferson," in order to ascertain that statesman's own words in relation to the very subject alluded to by the writer in the Atlantic.

"The real question, as seen in the States afflicted with this unfortunate population, is, are our slaves to be presented with freedom and a dagger? For, if Congress has the power to regulate the conditions of the inhabitants of the States within the States, it will be but another exercise of that power to declare that all shall be free. Are we then to see again Athenian and Lacedemonian confederacies? to wage another Peloponnesian war to settle the ascendancy between them? Or is this the locsin of merely a servile war? That remains to be seen; but not, I hope, by you or me. Surely they will parley awhile, and give us time to get out of the way."—Memoirs, vol. IV., p. 347.

Again,

"The coincidence of a marked principle, moral and political, with a geographical line, once conceived, I feared would never more be obliterated from the mind; that it would be recurring on every occasion, and renewing irritations, until it would kindle such mutual and moral hatred as to render separation preferable to eternal discord.—I have been among the most sanguine in believing that our Union would be of long duration. I now doubt it much, and see the event at no great distance, and the direct consequence of this question; not by the line which has been so confidently counted on—the laws of nature control this—but by the Potomac, Ohio, and Missouri, or, more probably, the Mississippi upwards to our northern boundary."—Jefferson's Memoirs, vol. iv. p. 331.

Mr. Jefferson retired from public life in 1809, Missouri was admitted in 1821, nearly 17 years before his death. His views upon that question then were the deliberate results of philosophic study, and not the "hastily broached opinions" of the mere politician. No one indeed could have been more capable of closer insight—none of forming so impartial an estimate of the men and measures of that day than he was. Passion, prejudice, unsatisfied ambition, certainly could not warp his judgment; and even if it were probable that those views were "wrested from him in the excitement of the Missouri struggle," the giving them to the world unmodified and as he first conceived them, many years afterward in his own Memoirs, shows that the most matured deliberation had not diminished his sense of their original weight and integrity. A man who could utter such words as might be suffering bodily pain, be old, poor, deserted, yet with our retrospection we should think his mind remarkably sound indeed.

How base the attempt—how signal the failure—to convert the shining character of the "great Democrat," that pure patriot and far-seeing statesman, into a meaningless abolition daub!

The attempt by the Northern Press of late years to abolitionize the name of Thomas Jefferson, is but one illustration of that utter worthlessness and misdirection, which Junius attacked in this wise:

"It is not that you do evil by design, but that you never do good by mistake." W.

A BRITISH TRAVELLER ON THE SOUTH AND ITS CONQUEST.

To the Editor of the London News:

SIR: This day's article on American affairs in your able journal concludes: "We cannot estimate camp, and reading partisan papers."

Agreeing as I do in this sentiment, may I request the insertion of a correction to the erroneous conclusions you arrive at. Your article ridicules the manufacturing qualities of the seceding States, states that the slaves at Richmond go barefoot to shoe the Southern army, that the army, "in citizen garment," are armed with squirrel rifles, or any tools of offence that can be put to use; and lastly, that it can be no more true that the South is manufacturing great guns and ammunition for a long war, than that it is already well clothed and well armed.

Let me, in answer, state facts. It is true that the manufacturing capabilities of the seceding States are in their infancy; they have heretofore depended on the North, and they do not wish to be a manufacturing people; they wish to remain producers of large and valuable staples of commerce, and exchange them for the manufactured goods of Europe, unhampered by Morrill tariffs or protective duties. Ought England to object?

In October, when I was at Richmond, every one seemed not only shod, but well fed; and the shoeing of the Southern army will not, I can assure your readers, help the Northerners to reverse present results.

That the men are roughly and not always uniformly clad, I admit; but homespun cloth may be as warm, though not so costly, showy and rotten as Broadway contractors' suits.

The arms that won at Bull Run and at Ball's Bluff, could hardly have been squirrel rifles, nor the guns any tools of offence that could be put to use, that made Sherman's regular battery at the latter engagement change front fifteen times, loading to the capture of some of his pieces.

Lastly, it is not untrue that the South can manufacture great guns and ammunition for a long war.

When I was at Norfolk, I saw 1,200 men in the employ of the Southern Government, working in the magnificent naval yard there, which the Southerners had saved from the intended destruction of the Federal Commodore; they were, when I was there, rifling large guns, casting shot and shell, building gunboats, and iron-plating the Merrimac, which they had raised from the harbor.

I was shown it all by two as fine naval officers as, I believe, could be found in our own service. They had both sacrificed everything in the Confederate cause. One had four sons fighting under the same banner; and they told me they would rather die than surrender. These were the sentiments of the whole people. I say nothing of the right or wrong of the respective causes. I may have opinions on this subject, but this much I know, that no amount of money or power will conquer eight millions of united people animated by the courage and determination that influence the seceding States, or subjugate a territory of 900,000 square miles against the will of such a population.

Would that the Northern Government could be brought to an unwelcome conviction of the hopeless nature of this contest; or that England and France combined would endeavor (not on the narrow ground of efficient or non-efficient blockade, but on the high grounds of humanity and civilization) to put an end by mediation to the present desolating, destructive, and, unless stayed by such interference, I fear, interminable strife.

I am, &c.,

ANONYMUS VANE TEMPEST.

House of Commons, Feb. 27, 1862.

FROM KEY WEST.

The Key West correspondent of the Boston Journal, under date of the 6th, writes as follows:

OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE MISSISSIPPI.

I have conversed with some prisoners recently taken, in reference to the obstructions placed across the Mississippi by the Confederates, to prevent the passage of Union men-of-war. From them I learn there is an immense raft of logs, containing eighty thousand feet, stretched across the river at a point called the "Jump." The raft is secured to the banks of the river on either side by heavy chains, which are dropped when any of the Confederate steamers pass. This formidable obstruction is commanded by a strong battery.

ESCAPE OF CONFEDERATE STEAMERS FROM NEW ORLEANS.

The unwelcome intelligence reaches us that while the steamer Brooklyn was in pursuit of the Confederate steamer Magnolia, the steamers Tennessee and Florida escaped from New Orleans, the former with 1,600 and the latter with 800 bales of cotton. These steamers are owned by the same Company which purchased the Magnolia, and are a part of the fleet of cotton-laden steamers which I have before referred to as being ready to run the blockade. The Tennessee attempted to get out of Pass a L'Outre before the Magnolia, which passed her, bound up the river as she came down. It appears, furthermore, that the United States steamer Mercedita was ordered to join in the chase of the Magnolia by Capt. Craven, who fancied that she was a faster vessel than the Brooklyn, instead of which she fell far astern.

In the absence of the two steamers from the Pass, the Tennessee and Florida came out. They were discovered by the Preble, and the bark J. A. Davis was sent in pursuit, with what chance of overtaking them may readily be imagined. Both steamers escaped, the Tennessee going to Europe and the Florida to Havana, probably. The Florida here mentioned should not be confounded with the Confederate gunboat of that name, which was engaged with the steamer Massachusetts last fall.—This is a propeller, nearly new, of about six hundred tons. It is a matter of regret that the Mercedita, finding that she could render no assistance in the capture of the Magnolia, did not return at once to her station.

The telegraphic operator at Salt Lake communicates the intelligence that the snow on the mountains is about five feet on a level, and at one point (a ravine probably) it had drifted to a depth of forty feet, covering up telegraphic poles, wire, and all.

Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen is rapidly recovering his health.

RAY'S

COMBINED REAPER

AND MOWER,

FOR THE PRESENT SEASON—1862.

The undersigned presents to the public this new machine, the lightest and strongest that is made. As a Reaper it weighs from six to seven hundred pounds—as a Mower from three to four hundred pounds. It has a continuous bar, forming frame and finger-bar, made of wrought-iron, to which is attached the driving-power. This Combined Reaper and Mower is divested of all cog gearing, which renders it both simple and durable, unlike all other Reapers with their complicated gearing, which is hard to understand or explain. This machine is made of the very best of material, principally wrought iron; it is warranted to do its work better than can be done by hand, it having a peculiar guard, which enables it to cut wet grass as well as dry.

☞ I challenge the world for competition.

Hundreds of certificates could be given in reference to its value, which I deem unnecessary. A test of this machine is all the Farmer requires—every season it was in use this met the demand. It received the highest premium at the "Maryland Institute Fairs" of 1859, 1860 and 1861, also various premiums through the Southern and Western States.

My Factory is at the corner of LEADENHALL AND HENRIETTA STREETS, South Baltimore.

Information can be had at any of the Agricultural Houses in the city in reference to this machine. I have fitted up a large Shop to manufacture these REAPERS, and orders sent in early there will be no difficulty in getting a machine. All orders addressed to

FRANCIS RAY,

No. 401 West Lombard street,

Will meet with prompt attention. Catalogues embracing hundreds of certificates can be had by applying for them.

☞ Price of Combined Machine, $121. Mower, $90.
