BALTIMORE.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 1862

SKETCH OF WINCHESTER AND VICINITY.

Winchester at one time was a thriving town, in Frederick county, Virginia, of which county it is the capital. It is located at a point one hundred and fifty miles distant from Richmond, in a north-northwesterly direction, and is seventy-one miles west-by-north of Washington. It is about twenty miles north of the Manassas Gap, and thirty-two miles from Harper's Ferry by railroad. It is distant from Gordonsville about eighty miles in an air-line, leading due south, and about one hundred miles by the turnpike-road via Front Royal and one of the gaps in the Blue Ridge Mountains. It is eighteen miles northeast of Strasburg, which, by rail, is sixty-one miles from Manassas Junction.—There is no railroad connection northward between Winchester and any other of the Confederate head-quarters. The town is pleasantly situated in a beautiful and fertile country, which forms part of the great valley of Virginia. With the exception of Wheeling, it is the largest town in the State west of the Blue Ridge. It is quite regularly planned, the houses are built in a compact and substantial manner, mostly of brick and stone, and are supplied with excellent water, which is brought in iron pipes from a spring half a mile distant. Winchester at one time contained about twelve churches, one academy, two banks (which had an aggregate capital of six hundred and eighty thousand dollars), two newspaper offices and a lyceum.

The place is the terminus of the Winchester and Potomac Railroad, by which it was, previous to the rebellion, connected with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Harper's Ferry, and thence united with all the prominent cities and towns of the great West and the ports of the East. It has a number of turnpike roads radiating from it in every direction, which attract a large amount of trade and travel to it as a common centre. It had a population in 1850 of about four thousand five hundred souls. The county in which it is situated has an area of three hundred and seventy-eight square miles. The Opequan, Sleepy and Black creeks, affluents of the Potomac, rise within it and flow in a northeasterly direction. The surface is beautifully diversified by mountain scenery, and the principal elevation, the North Mountain, extends along the northwestern border. The county, before seized upon as a point of occupation by the Confederates, was reputed as one of the most wealthy and highly cultivated in the State. Alas! how greatly has it changed! Blue limestone rock underlies a portion of the surface. The streams furnish abundant motive power for mills and factories. The turnpike roads through it are very good, all leading to Winchester, as before stated. The county was formed in 1738. The population at last returns was nearly sixteen thousand, of whom about two thousand three hundred were slaves. The whole county has suffered severely during the rebellion, having, with Jefferson county, been the scene of several engagements between the contending forces.—New York Herald.

THE IRON-CLAD STEAMER MERRIMAC.

From the New Orleans Picayune.

Since the Merrimac, or the Virginia, has been the means of gaining such a glorious victory, the following from the Richmond correspondence of the New Orleans Crescent will be read with interest:—

As it is almost certain that the Merrimac will either have proved a brilliant success or a miserable failure before this reaches you, it will not be improper in me to give your readers a few facts in regard to her. In the first place, her engines are five hundred and ten horse power; and, in spite of her great weight, it is thought she will make from twelve to fifteen miles an hour. She does not draw by a foot and a half as much water as was expected. When afloat she presents to the enemy only a roof above the water. All of her machinery is below the water line. Her sides and roof are composed of oak twenty-eight inches thick, covered with six inches of plate and railroad iron. She has an apparatus for throwing hot water on boarders. Her armament consists of ten guns only; all rifled.

The guns in her sides—four in number—are eighty-pounders. Those at the bow and stern throw a one hundred-pound solid shot, or a one hundred and twenty-pound shell, and these guns have three ports, which enables her to give a broadside of six guns. She has furnaces for heating shot. Her crew consists of ten lieutenants and three hundred and fifty picked men, and among them are the best gunners in the old navy. She has under water a wedge-shaped prow of oak and iron thirty-three feet long. Commodore Buchanan commands her, and the second in command is Catesby Jones—both men of the highest order of courage. Buchanan has confidence in her, and says she is going to glory or a grave in her; Jones is less confident, but says she is as good a place to die in as a man could have. The objection to her, and it is a serious one, is the fact that she is entirely dependent on her machinery; if that gets out of order she becomes a mere log in the water. But if that holds out, it is fair to expect that she will do some damage to the two Yankee frigates now lying off Newport News before this week ends. Let us not be too sanguine, but hope for the best. She may help to help us out of our great difficulty.

LOSS OF THE SHIP CHARTER OAK—A PORTION OF THE CREW DROWNED.—The ship Rattler, Capt. Almy, from Havre Jan. 27, which arrived at this port yesterday morning, makes the following report: From February 7 to the 29th experienced a continuous heavy gale from S. W. to N. N. W., at times blowing a hurricane, during which time drifted from lat. 48 lon. 35, to lat. 36, lon. 33.—February 19, lat. 40 80, lor. 35 10, strong gale from W., with heavy squalls, ship heading S. S. W., with storm staysail set, observed a ship to windward on the same tack; at noon saw her colors were flying union down. 3 P. M.—She kept off and ran down to us. She proved to be the ship Charter Oak, of Richmond, Me., Capt. Witham, from Philadelphia, for Liverpool with a cargo of flour and grain, in a sinking condition, and requested us to lay by and take the crew off. Sent the second officer with a boat. As the night was very dark, and a tremendous sea running, he succeeded with great difficulty in returning to the ship, with only five of the Charter Oak's crew, viz: E. D. Jameson, first officer; Wm. Whitney, second do.; Wm. De Gross, seaman; Levi L. Whitney and Francis Reed, boys. When the boat left the ship the barometer stood at 28 64, and was falling rapidly, so that when she returned it was 28 42. A few moments after the boat came alongside the wind hauled to north-northwest, blowing a perfect hurricane for three hours, when it moderated to a heavy gale, which lasted to the 25th, rendering it impossible to save more of the Charter Oak's crew. The ship must have capsized and gone down, as her light disappeared suddenly at 9.30 P. M. When the Rattler left her she was nearly full of water, and the sea was making a clean breach over her continually. At daylight there was nothing to be seen of the ship.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE VANDERBILT.—The great steamship Vanderbilt, of the Havre line, has been secured by the Government for the purpose of converting her into an iron-clad vessel. The ship lies at the foot of Spring street, North River, where a large number of mechanics are now engaged in altering her for her new purpose. The large cabin on the after-deck has been taken down, and the deck has been newly floored with 6-inch white oak timber, which gives the vessel the appearance of a man-of-war. Amidships heavy timbers are being placed up to the height of the walking beams, leaving a room inside of but three feet, while outside of these timbers a number of bales of cotton will be stowed, filling up the entire width of the gangway. This barricade is to extend from a few feet aft of the foremast to a few feet forward of mainmast, and is intended to protect the engine against shot and shell, and it is well known that neither shot nor shell can penetrate cotton bales. The hull of the ship is being fastened from the inside by heavy iron braces and bolts, while her outside will be plated with ¼ and ½ inch iron plates, which are now going on board. Two ugly-looking wrought iron plates about one inch thick are to extend from her bow, intending, no doubt, to act as monitors to any vessel she may come in contact with. The Ocean Queen is also being changed into a ram.—Boston Courier.

The Board of Aldermen last evening adopted the ordinance which we published on Saturday, authorizing the Controller to issue Harbor Defence Bonds, redeemable in one year, to the amount of half a million of dollars, for the defence of the harbor, and, Mr. John Dimon, Robert T. Hawes, Myers Cornell, Andrew Carrigan and A. Cordoza were appointed the commission called for in the ordinance. The Corporation Counsel was instructed to memorialize the Legislature to legalize the bonds.—New York Tribune, March 25th.
