BALTIMORE.

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1862.

AFFAIRS AT WINCHESTER.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune at Winchester, sends that paper a letter occupying a couple of columns, concerning things in general at that ancient Virginia town. From this letter we extract the following paragraphs:

Around the wounded Confederates their lady sympathizers fluttered in little rustling mobs, blocking up the way, with tea-pots, soup-bowls and trays, and although the majority of them extended their assistance to the Union heroes, it was not done with the heartiness which marks the impartial conduct of our surgeons, one of whom remarked to a lady, in our hearing, that they suffered, and knew no distinction in their patients, and that all unfriendliness ceased towards a wounded enemy.

Among those who went over the field next day was a Baltimore secessionist, who selected as the most agreeable trophy of the combat a small tree—from which he manufactured a cane—stained with bloody finger-marks made by a brother secessionist. The cane he proposed to carry to his native place, to delight the eyes of his sympathizing friends.

When the troops first entered Winchester the people kept very quiet and secluded; their rampant secessionism was robbed of its expressive features. Soldiers that entered the few places remaining open were given the articles they wanted without money. This did not last long; finding themselves unmolested, some of the boldest spirits made their appearance on the street to scowl at the military bands parading up and down, and sneer at the tired soldiers. At the hotels and stores so in of all degrees of baseness was forced upon those in need of change. If any grumbled they were saucily informed that it was good enough for Winchester (which is very true), and would buy anything in the place. In view of this state of affairs, General Shields had an order read to the regiments of his division forbidding them to take the Southern rags, and subsequently the natives have refused to circulate any but their own corporation paper, showing a dawning of reason which argues well, and proves that they still possess some of the attributes of the white race.

Winchester is just about 100 years behind the age—a dirty, slovenly, ill-paved, rickety, unpainted, foul-smelling town—in all which it resembles every other town in the State which we have visited. The demoralizing influence of the "institution" is everywhere apparent. This lovely valley of the Shenandoah, reminding the traveler of the intervales on the Connecticut, would, in Northern hands, be one of the most flourishing and thrifty counties in the Union. Its railroad is a fair specimen of its present position and progress. As it is laid with old strap rails—out of repair, of course—it will only permit a speed of three to five miles an hour.

The hotels are most miserable; charges on the scale of Washington prices, and no accommodation. At the Taylor House, the tip-top hotel, a lively secesh hole, which would have been a hospital before this, but for its excessive inconvenience and dirt, there is great difficulty in getting anything to eat, or a room to sleep in; and, if possible, other houses are worse. Of private accommodations, there is a short supply. As a general thing the natives shun the invaders, those who do not do it on principle making it their pol cy. The Union men speak of and look forward to a day of retribution on their Confederate neighbors, when an effort will be made to clear up some of the scores existing between them, independent of those made by the Government for its re-establishment.

THE SUMTER PRISONERS.

The following is an extract from a private letter to a gentlemen in New York, showing the manner in which the Paymaster of the Sumter and the United States ex Consul at Cadiz were made prisoners, and transferred from the United States ship Ino to the bark Harvest Home, bound to Boston, where they may be soon expected:

CADIZ, March 11, 1862.

In my last letter, a week ago, I forgot to tell you that the ship Ino arrived from Boston in thirteen days' passage. She was a merchant vessel, purchased by the Government, and is commanded by Lieut. Creesy, formerly a celebrated captain in the merchant service, who made some extraordinary passages in the Flying Cloud to and from San Francisco. Captain Creesy proceeded from Algesiras, and from thence over to Tangier, to take on board the ex-Consul, T. T. Tunstall, and the Secretary of the Sumter, who, I mentioned in by our Consul. It appears that they had been confined in irons for over a week at the Consulate, previous to the arrival of the Ino. The foreigners at Tangier, on the day of the arrival of the latter vessel, surrounded the Consulate and demanded the release of the prisoners.

Captain Creesy landed thirty men, armed with cutlasses and navy revolvers, and, headed by a drummer, "ever and anon beating martial sounds," marched up to the Consulate, some half a mile distant from the landing, and there formed a hollow square, with the prisoners shackled in the centre, each carried by two sailors, and returned to the beach amidst crowds of Jews, Gentiles and Mahomedans that lined the streets and housetops, hooting and shouting all the time. The Ino then passed over to Algesiras. Captain Craven, of the Tuscarora, directed Captain Creesy to release the prisoners; but he declined, and went to sea for the purpose of meeting with some American vessel bound home. After cruising about some eight or nine days, he fell in with the bark Harvest Home from this port, bound to Boston, on board of which vessel he transferred the prisoners in irons, to be taken home in that manner, and to be handed over to the District Attorney at Boston. The prisoners to be confined on board in separate rooms, and no communication to be allowed between them, and also to fare as the sailors. Two blankets and a bed each were furnished them by the Ino. Captain Creesy escorted the Harvest Home as far as Cape St. Vincent, and then returned to this port. The name of the paymaster of the Sumter is Myers.

THE CONFEDERATE STEAMER MERRIMAC.

The Norfolk correspondent of the Nashville Union and American gives the following interesting particulars of the steamer Merrimac previous to her engagements off Hampton Roads on the 8th and 9th:

Yesterday, at dress parade, orders were read out for all who wished to volunteer for six months' service aboard the Merrimac, to report themselves at headquarters. From this the inference is that she will soon be ready for sea. The Yankees, fully apprised of everything going on with us, are on the look out for her, and are prepared to have a lively time with her should she attempt to force the blockade—as she certainly will. Inasmuch as the Lincolnites are already fully posted in regard to her, there can be nothing faulty in giving you a slight idea of the nondescript craft. Once she was the pride of the Federal navy, and considered the finest of her class afloat. Being at the Gosport Navy Yard when the frightened Hessians fled from that institution they attempted to destroy her, but failed in the undertaking. Acting on the hint of the New Orleans "turtle," the Government determined to make a Norfolk turtle of the Merrimac, and workmen have been busily engaged on her for nearly six months, and a striking metamorphosis they effected in her general appearance. From a first-class frigate she is razed down till the surface she presents above water is no greater than that of an ordinary canal boat, and on that surface no balls nor shells can take effect. Three feet below her water lines she is en plating, four inches thick, on solid oak twenty-eight inches in thickness, commences and runs upward from each side, sloping like the roof of a house, and being, in fact, an iron roof on a floating house. No spars, no masts, no upper works of any kind are in sight. Even the chimneys are on spiral springs, "quashable" without injury, and the only place she can be struck is on her iron roof. The only way of getting into her is through a small hatchway, to which is an iron door fastened immoveably on the inside, so that the enemy had as well attempt to board a loggerhead turtle as her. Her armament consists of three heavy guns on each side; and one at bow and stern.—The iron cleaver in front is supposed capable of dividing a Yankee ship in two equal portions with great nicety and despatch. To all appearances she is a most formidable institution, and whether she proves a success or not, the Yankees are greatly exercised on her account, and the very name of Merrimac is a terror to them.

LAUNCH.—On Saturday evening a new and beautiful ship called the Madurese, was launched from the ship-yard of Mr. Stephen Andrews, at Dog-Fish Bar. She was commenced some sixteen months since, and her frame was standing one year before being planked, consequently she is thoroughly seasoned. She is 1,042 tons burthen. She is a fine model, combining fast sailing with large carrying capacity. She is built of the best material, is copper fastened, thoroughly ventilated, and is fitted with all the modern improvements. She has double topsail yards; all patent blocks; patent windlass and capstan; Robinson's patent steering apparatus, patent hawser pipes, iron water tanks capable of holding 4,500 gallons water; house and cabin on deck, finished in the best style. She is owned by Captain N. Y. French, of Walpole, and the builder, Mr. Andrews, and is intended for the general freighting business under command of Capt. William W. French, an experienced ship-master of South New Market, N. H., late of the bark Blue Wing, of Baltimore. She is to be rigged immediately, and proceed to New York, where she will probably load for San Francisco.—New Bedford Whalemen's Shipping List.
