CENSORSHIP.

The loyal people receive the first definite information of the principal movement of the Army of the Potomac, through the Norfolk and Richmond newspapers. It is perfectly evident that the Confederates are fully informed of all our military operations, and that the censorship of the press, as exercised, is an unmitigated nuisance. Northern newspapers have not mentioned the fact that a very large force has been dispatched from the vicinity of Washington to the vicinity of Fortress Monroe. This transfer took place some days ago. The Confederates knew all about it all the time. There were our transports right before their eyes, and they could watch with their glasses the disembarkation of our troops, and judge pretty accurately of their numbers. Yet, Northern journals must not speak of the movement, for fear of giving information to the enemy! How long is this abominable farce to be continued? Secretary Stanton, it seems, has just ordered the newspaper correspondents away from Fortress Monroe. Is there a man in the United States besides the Secretary, who supposes that this arbitrary proceeding will directly or indirectly be productive of any good service to the country? We hope not. If it is dangerous to give the loyal men of the North, who are making so many sacrifices to sustain the Government, information as to how the work of crushing the rebellion is going on, would it not be well to prohibit the circulation of Southern news in the North?

The Norfolk Day Book stated a few days since that one hundred Federal transports were at Fortress Monroe, having arrived there laden with troops. If we had published the same fact the same day we might have been court-martialed for it. How did the Confederates obtain their news? Simply by looking on from Sewall's Point, where they can count the ships at the Fortress as easily as we can count the steamers at our landing from Newport Barracks. Why should our authorities attempt to make a mystery of a matter so plain? There is a flavor of humbuggery about this stock gambling censorship. Several Eastern editors were threatened with death by shooting according to the 57th Article of War a week or two since. Their crime, we believe, consisted in an intimation that Richmond might be attacked by way of the York peninsula. Similar intimations were about the same time made by the Richmond papers. In the meantime, the most outrageous violation of good faith and common sense, in the publication of obviously contraband intelligence, has been suffered to pass without so much as a hint of rebuke. We refer to the publication, first, in half a dozen of the prominent Western papers, and subsequently all over the country, of General Pope's scheme to pass steamboats through a bayou and swamp, so as to use them in throwing his army across the Mississippi to take the Confederate batteries on the Kentucky shore that support those on Island No. 10. If so flagrant, and possibly injurious an outrage as this, is not punished, or even noticed, why keep up a false pretense of censorship, which is doubly odious from its patent inefficiency? The people are feeling pretty deeply on this point, and have a right to demand explanations and reformation. When they know that information has been withheld from them—as in the case of the surrender of Mason and Slidell—with no conceivable wise purpose, and that stock speculations we indulged, in which the familiars of Cabinet officers were concerned, they naturally feel that they are not being treated with the consideration due. It is time that the people and the press should make themselves heard in definite terms in this connection.

From the N. Y. Herald, April 5.

THE ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The dominant party of the United States Senate, by the decisive vote of 29 to 14, have passed their peremptory bill for the immediate abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, every proposition for gradual emancipation and for the submission of the question to the vote of the people of the District having been indignantly rejected.

Practically, the liberation of the slaves of said District, as provided for in this bill, is a small matter. There are, perhaps, to-day less than a thousand of them, against a free negro population in the District of some fifteen thousand; so that in reality, now, there is no fact to be explained that the vote of every Senator from every border slave State was cast against this bill, from first to last, and that those border slave State Senators, from first to last, fought the bill as if it were a measure full of mischief to slavery in said States?

This question may be readily answered. Those border slave State Senators regard this bill as the entering wedge of an abolition programme embracing all the slave States. It is feared, for example, that the next experiment of the anti-slavery league in Congress will be the abolition of slavery in all the forts, dockyards, &c., of the United States, and that the next will be the repeal of the Fugitive Slave law; and the next, under the power to "regulate commerce," a bill of abolition pains and penalties concerning the traffic in slaves between the several States—and so on until this institution of slavery shall become practically outlawed by the General Government. We know, too, that there is good ground for these apprehensions, considering the implacable fanaticism of our abolition demagogues and disorganizers in their chosen work of "emancipation or separation." Against their incendiary schemes, however, we are sure that, during the present administration, our border slave States may rely upon the honest and steadfast Union principles of Abraham Lincoln, and that our loyal conservative people, North and South, in the next administration, will take care to retain these Union principles as the practical policy of the Government.
