COL. BALDWIN—TRIBUTE OF THE LATE GEN. LANDER TO HIS GALLANTRY.

Colonel Baldwin, of the 21st Virginia regiment, who left on the Adelaide on Sunday evening for Fortress Monroe with the view of being exchanged for Colonel Lee, of the 20th Massachusetts, carries with him from the late General Lander the following soldierly testimony to his bravery. The Camp Chase correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer writes thus:

The Colonel was captured by General Lander, who writes to the Commandant of Camp Chase the following, upon which recommendation Colonel Baldwin is paroled to have a privilege of a circuit of six miles around Camp Chase, taking in, of course, Columbus.

"I cannot express too strongly my favorable attention and kindness Colonel Baldwin [illegible] soldier, whatever his political principles may be. He sent his baggage to the rear, and with his commissioned officers, armed with the private' muskets, defended for some time against my entire cavalry force, saving his baggage, and by that means becoming a prisoner himself, with seventeen commissioned officers.

"F. W. LANDER,
"Brigadier-General Commanding."

FROM PORT ROYAL.

Correspondence of the New York Caucasian

AN AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE NEGRO MISSIONARIES

PORT ROYAL, S. C., March 15th, 1862.

While writing you of these Gideonites, I may as well tell you a fact which may not have found its way to the North. The greatery of the Abolitionists has been about "chains and slavery at the South." I suppose no one ever saw a negro in chains upon any plantation. It has, therefore, been reserved for Yankee progress to place the negroes in chain gangs! It is a fact, that a sleazy and worthless are these contrabands here, that in order to get any work out of them, they have to be divided in gangs of about a dozen, each with a driver, and these negroes, while at work on the entrenchments, are actually chained together two by two around the ankles! This is no idle assertion. I give you the name and regiment of an officer who will vouch for it, so that you can state it by authority. I don't exclaim against it, for they will not work unless some coercion is used; but what shall we think of the negro worshippers who have thus only exchanged the negro from one state of slavery to another?

Depend upon it, all efforts to change the negro, short of re-creating him, are worse than useless, and these silly people who have come down here will soon find it out. Already they are quarrelling among themselves. The women declare that the men are spooneys, in fact no men at all. To use the expressive language of one indignant feminine of the company, in speaking of them, "five would not make one decent man." The record of their career here will be a record of blunders. They are upon a fool's errand, and the sooner they go home and attend to the wants and administer to the necessities of their own white sisters, the greater credit it will be to them. Of the vice, and licentiousness, and shamelessness of the negroes here, I will not speak. Their religion consists in words—words—words—while their acts betray such a want of moral perception as to shock humanity. They need and must have a master, to restrain, guide and care for them. Now, they are becoming rapidly demoralized, and I can see a vast decline in them since we first landed here. There is now no steady hand over them; but, kicked and cuffed by one, preached to by others, and taught the idea that no one has any right to control them, it will not be long before this place will be a pandemonium on earth. If the Administration desire to do a sensible thing, it will order all these psalm-singing male and female Gideonites to pack up and go home at once. Then put the plantations under the control of some practical men, and let them have the negroes' service upon the same terms as their masters enjoyed them. In this way something might be done; but as it is, the whole matter is such a stupendous farce that one can only say

"To laugh may show a want of godliness and grace,
"But to be grave exceeds all power of face."

Little do the people at the North realize what fearful sacrifices their children must follow the course preferred by their parents. The enjoyment of civil and political rights is not to depend on religious confession, nor to be subject to any restriction on that account. Difference of religion will not form a civil obstacle to marriage. Professors of all beliefs are equally admissable by law to all dignities, functions and public employments. Every church or religious society has the right publicly to carry out its worship, with a reserve as to measures necessary to secure public order. The law grants to all churches and religious societies this legal right. There is to be no State privileged religion.

The latest census reports state that there are in England fifty-seven suicides to every million of inhabitants; in Scotland, thirty-four; in Sweden, forty-one, and in Prussia one hundred and four.
