BALTIMORE.

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 1862.

From the New York World, April 9.

RECORD OF THE SIEGE.

The siege of Island Number Ten being one of the most memorable, as it is one of the most important events of the war, we have prepared the following brief chronicle of the occurrences of each day from the beginning of the bombardment up to the time of the capture of the Confederate stronghold:

March 15.—Commodore Foote, with several gunboats and part of the mortar fleet, left Hickman for Island Number Ten.

March 16.—Bombardment commenced.

March 17.—Rifled gun on board the St. Louis exploded, killing and wounding fourteen men.

March 18.—General Pope repulsed the gunboat fleet at New Madrid. A Confederate transport, loaded with cannon, reported sunk by the fire from the fleet.

March 19.—Commodore Foote reports the Island harder to conquer than Columbus. Firing continued night and day.

March 20.—Cannonading continued all day. All the guns but one in the upper battery reported dismounted. Hollins's ram sent from Memphis.

March 21.—Firing continued at intervals.

March 22.—But little firing from the gunboats, to which the Confederate batteries made no reply.

March 23.—Mortars fired with considerable regularity all day; result not ascertained.

March 24.—Firing continued at intervals; Confederate batteries replied but seldom.

March 25.—Affairs unchanged.

March 26.—Main works of the enemy reported overflowed. Operations slackened.

March 27.—Firing continued at intervals only. Residents captured report, the Confederates fifteen thousand strong.

March 28.—Heavy firing from the fleet. Upper battery reported silenced; enemy lost sixty killed and twenty-five wounded. Confederates constructing new batteries.

March 29.—Firing very heavy.

March 30.—Heavy bombardment, to which the Confederates make no reply.

March 31.—Same condition of affairs.

April 1.—An expedition from the fleet proceeded to the upper Confederate fort and spiked six guns.

April 2.—Operations not reported.

April 3.—Confederate heavy floating battery detached from shore and drifted down the stream.—Gunboat Carondelet ran the blockade.

April 4—Firing active, and good execution to the Confederate works reported.

April 5.—Transports and barges arrived at New Madrid. Heavy firing all day.

April 6.—Gen. Pope succeeds in landing Gen. Paine's division on the Tennessee shore. The whole army to be moved over. Gunboat Pittsburg ran the blockade.

April 7.—Evacuation of Island No. 10.

THE LATE PETER HASTIE, ESQ.—The death of Peter Hastie, Esq., one of the principal constructors of the Croton Aqueduct, deserves more than the passing obituary record. He died on Monday, March 10, at the residence of his friend, Edwin Windust, Park-row, New York. Mr. Hastie was born in Scotland in the year 1805, near the banks of the Tweed—a region rendered classic from its intimate association with the names of Thomas the Rhymer, Sir Walter Scott, Thomson, the poet of "the Seasons," the Ettrick Shepherd, Mungo Park, and others. On the banks of the Ettrick, where it joins the Tweed near Abbotsford, was his native place. Here he received his early education, and acquired great skill as an angler. He received the higher branches of his education at Edinburg University; and shortly after leaving college in 1832 he emigrated to this country, and commenced the practice of his profession, which was that of a Civil Engineer, being engaged on canals and railways in Western New York, Pennsylvania, and Indiana. At length Mr. John Jervis, one of the most accomplished engineers in America, who had undertaken to supply the city of New York with pure water from the Croton river, by aqueduct, dams, and bridges for a distance of 45 miles, formed his acquaintance, discovered his worth and his scientific ability, and gladly enlisted him into the corps as one of his assistants. Here he remained till the conclusion of the stupendous work; and in token of their appreciation of his services, the authorities caused his name, with that of the other engineers and directors, to be engraven in some conspicuous spot upon the bridges and reservoirs throughout the line. Mr. Hastie was subsequently appointed Resident Engineer of the Croton Work, and in the discharge of his duties he caught a cold, which, having settled on his lungs, no doubt brought on the lingering ailments which terminated in his death.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE WORKMANSHIP OF IVORY.—None of our manufacturers have yet reached the consummate skill of the Chinese artists in the workmanship of ivory, chiefly remarkable in their concentric balls, their chess pieces and models. Yet the adaptation to useful purposes of this valuable substance is fully understood by those who do not undertake to rival the exquisite minuteness of Eastern art. The manufacturers of surgical instruments are in the habit of rendering ivory flexible for use as tubes, probes, etc., by acting on the well-known fact that, when bones are subjected to the action of hydrochloric acid, the phosphate of lime, which forms one of their component parts, is extracted, and thus bones retain their original form, and acquire great flexibility. After giving the pieces of ivory their required form and polish, they are steeped in acid, either pure or diluted, until they become supple and elastic, and of a slightly yellow color. In the course of drying the ivory returns to its original hardness, but its flexibility can be easily restored by surrounding it with wet linen. It is now ascertained that the decay of articles in ivory can be effectually checked, even when its progress has advanced so far as to cause the specimens to crumble away under the hands. Some of the works in ivory forwarded by Mr. Layard from Nineveh, were found, on their arrival in England, to be in a state of rapid decomposition. Professor Owen was consulted on the subject, and he suggested a remedy which, on trial, proved to be in the highest degree successful. Concluding that the decay was owing to the loss of gelatine in the ivory, he recommended that the articles should be boiled in a solution of gelatine; thus treated, they became firm and solid.

LEECH FISHING.—The old method of fishing for leeches was by persons uncovering their limbs and wading into the water, when the voracious little animals, hungry for blood, at once seized upon them, and were then caught and bagged by the fishermen. If ever you pass through La Breme you will see a man, pale and straightbaired, with a woollen cap on his head, and his legs and arms naked; he walks along the borders of a marsh, among the spots left dry by the surrounding waters; this man is a leech-fisher. To see him from a distance—his woe-begone aspect, his hollow eyes, his livid lips, his singular gestures—you would take him for a maniac. If you observe him every now and then raising his legs and examining them one after another, you might suppose him a fool; but he is an intelligent leech-fisher. The leeches attach themselves to his legs and feet as he moves through their haunts; he feels their bite, and gathers them as they cluster about the roots of the bulrushes and aquatic weeds, or beneath the stones covered with a green and slimy moss. He may thus collect ten or twelve dozen in three or four hours. In summer, when the leeches retire into deep water, the fisher moves about on rafts made of twigs and rushes. One of these traders was known to collect, with the aid of his children, 17,500 leeches in the course of a few months. These he had deposited in a reservoir, where in one night they were frozen en masse. But congelation does not kill them, and they can easily be thawed into life by melting the ice that surrounds them.—Once a Week.

The Pittsburg Steel works near Pittsburg, Pa., have cast another monster cannon, fifteen-inch bore, and thirty-nine tons in the rough.
