AMERICAN AFFAIRS—GENERAL M'CLELLAN IN THE FIELD.

From the London Telegraph.

At last we have official information as to the condition of "the army of the Potomac," the object of General McClellan's advance, and the immediate prospects of the war. New York had been deluged with reports about the "magnificent condition" of the force, its "exceedingly fine spirit," and the "wild enthusiasm" of the men when they were reviewed by their commander on the 14th instant.—Stories were also current, collected with great assiduity from all who were prepared to provide them, that "the Rebels" were behaving in all respects like discomfited fugitives. A person who had come over from Gordonsville described them as pouring in "wildly," under the impression that they were pursued; the road from Manassas to the Rappahannock being "strewed with muskets and knapsacks," thrown away in flight; and we have already alluded to the straggling parties which had been captured, and which on a little examination turned out to comprise eleven individuals. It is now admitted that the Southern army had withdrawn from its position at Manassas in the most complete order; that the general in command—whoever he may be, for some say it is Lee, and others Beauregard—could concentrate 150,000 men on a given point at a day's notice. In short, all the recent advices confirm our own information, to the effect that the Confederates had withdrawn from their advanced position in fulfilment of a long-prepared plan, that they chose their own time and their own manner of effecting the movement; and that they accomplished their purpose without the slightest interruption or deviation, except perhaps the capture of some few individual stragglers, who remained upon the dubious margin separating the two forces.

If we could still doubt, we have a final affirmation of the same story from General McClellan himself, in the address issued to his army, the text of which is a confession as well as an announcement. Speaking of his own force, he says that formidable artillery has been "created," and "the Potomac army is now a real army." We have, indeed, had recent descriptions of its actual state, and they did not represent it as being in that condition which would have satisfied the Duke of Wellington, Sir Charles Napier, or even Black Charley Napier, the mounted marine, notwithstanding the rough-and-ready style in which he was prepared to conduct fighting afloat or ashore. They regard these things differently in America; and General McClellan is satisfied with his army, at all events sufficiently to say that he is so; but his impatiently awaited declaration amounts to an admission that he could not call it "a real army" down to this date. He has hitherto held it inactive, in order that it might "give a death-blow to the rebellion." So, by a singular coincidence, the moment for action has arrived just as the Confederates saw the policy of concentrating upon a better stronghold. General McClellan stands committed by his advance, and even by the very letter of his new bond with the Republic, to bring his men "on a decisive battle-field."

The gentlemen who have mustered to "whip creation" and the rebels, are told that their enterprise will not be so luxuriously easy as, in their excitement and self-confidence, they are wont to imagine. "I would not have you think," says their general, "that our aim is to be attained without a manly struggle. I will not disguise it from you that you have brave foes to encounter—foemen well worthy of the steel that you will use so well. I shall demand of you great and heroic exertion, rapid and long marches, privations perhaps." The young commander, therefore, is fully aware that the contest which he is now perforce bound to invite involves very serious chances for his own side and for his own reputation. Even the public journals have distinctly intimated that he must return either victorious or disgraced. We have already mentioned that several of his brother officers are said to have made up their minds that they will come back triumphant, or not at all; and manifestly their chief does not consider the second alternative to be entirely out of the question. He sees that they may be compelled to take up their residence on the battle-field in a much narrower home than they have been accustomed to; and the solemnity of the thought comes forth even through the authorative assurance that "God smiles upon us—victory attends us."

But the sober young Napoleon, who has taken so many months to train his army for the struggle, also prepares us for very startling events, and obviously desires to break the effect of the earlier news, should it prove to be disastrous. This passage in his address is very curious; he wishes his men to understand the inevitable character of their present enterprise, its momentous risks, and also the guarantees afforded to them by his own venture. "I will bring you now face to face with the rebels," he says, "and only pray that God may defend the right." We need not point out the very striking inconsistency of tone in several phrases of his address. "In whatever direction you may move," he continues, "however strange my actions may appear, bear in mind that my fate is linked with yours. All I do is to bring you where you wish to be, namely, on the decisive battle-field." He will try to spare loss, but he exclaims, "I know you will all follow me to our graves for the righteous cause." It reads very like the language of a man walking towards a doom which he does not yet know, while distinctly hinting that his actions may appear inexplicable, and that possibly he may move in directions not anticipated by his gallant supporters. It is obvious, therefore, that at least one man of the Northern party anticipates the possibility of some startling events not included in the calculations of the sanguine and confident military heroes who remain behind in "the cities."

In the rear of his advance we notice the same impulsiveness as ever, with no greater unity or certainty of purpose. The Senate, which had received petitions against emancipation, was also receiving reports from a committee of its own in favor of Lincoln's anti-slavery message, and was sending that report back to the committee. The measure for the abolition of negro bondage in Columbia, which had heretofore been a neutral ground for the North and South, was still under discussion; the graver of the two Chambers evidently being very doubtful as to the wisdom and policy of indulging abolitionism at the present juncture. The question of the Taxing bill had come before the Senate, and here again, in accordance with the spirit of the day, the debate upon this most astounding revolution in the financial system of the Republic turned mainly upon the question of slavery. The citizens, even the gravest of them, are so absorbed in the consideration of measures to take effect beyond the Potomac, that they positively could not concentrate their ideas upon the most enormous taxing system that the world has ever seen promulgated by a stroke of the legislative pen. Out-of-doors public opinion was in the same distracted condition, and we have the most fantastic illustrations of the confusion of mind which prevailed everywhere.

The New York Herald, for instance, the reflex of opinion in the Model Republic, where "all men are equal" and freedom is the ruling idol, hails the imposition of taxes upon journals; and why? Because they will render success impossible for all papers which cannot command large capital—will therefore identify the managers of papers with "property" and "respectability," and will render them "conservative" in their ideas. If the financial system of Republican America is to be inverted, certainly public opinion has undergone a violent revolution; if we look to mere party matters, we find the same conflict. Government, for instance, has recently been compelled to find a post for General Fremont, who not long since was so near being condemned for the most serious military offences; and now that he is made commander of the region between the Potomac and the Mississippi—the department, if we understand the topography, in which General McClellan is about to win his decisive victory—a region comprising, too, the Rebels States which are to be placed under a Federal Government like that of the territories—his elevation is vehemently assailed by popular organs as a sop to the Republican party, the very party which appointed the President himself.

Meanwhile, we observe other signs of the constant increase of expenditure. Not only is Congress appropriating money for the building of iron-clad ships, but the Legislature of Massachusetts is authorizing the construction of one or two vessels, on the plan of the Monitor, for the local protection of Boston. We did not exaggerate, then, when we remanded our readers that the hugest expenditure ever witnessed in the history of modern finance is accompanied by a somewhat proportionate outlay for the purposes of the several States, with a corresponding increase, of course, to the aggregate liability. And in the midst of this chaos, political, military, and financial, what are the leading men about? They are engaged in just the same work as the men led—they are gambling on the chance of "what may turn up."

A SMART YANKEE GIRL.—We relate a true story, which is a gratifying instance of successful Yankee enterprise. A young girl, belonging to a respectable family in reduced circumstances, four years ago learned to operate sewing machines, and then went out from this city to Peru to teach the art to Spanish girls and to establish the business in that country. She has since enjoyed uniform good health, and has realized between three and four thousand dollars a year beyond her expenses.—About a year ago she married a wealthy old Spaniard, who, dying, bequeathed to her a fortune of eighty thousand dollars, and thus placed her in very comfortable and independent circumstances. She now writes to urge her relatives to emigrate to Peru and share her good fortune.

The valuable property known as the Washington Rolling Mills, at Wheeling, Va., was sold at public sale on Tuesday, for $17,000. The purchaser was Mr. H. W. Drakely, of Baltimore, who was largely interested in the mills. The Intelligencer says the property cost originally $100,000, and is said to be worth at this time not less than $60,000.

The Detroit Free Press says the result of the recent elections in that State could not be more gratifying. There is scarcely a country where the Democrats have not made large gains. The Press says "these election returns show an extraordinary revolution going on in Michigan, a revolution that will lying and defamation of partisans and party organs cannot stop."

RELIABLE NEWS.
BALTIMORE, March 29, 1862.
Mr. Geo. Pearson—Dear Sir: Being troubled with a severe SORE THROAT and Cold (which settled on my lungs), I tried your MEDICATED TAR DROPS, and can speak very flatteringly of their having relieved me in a few hours, and curing me in three or four days. I cheerfully recommend your justly celebrated Tar Drops to all similarly affected, who will find them pleasant, simple, very efficacious, and the cheapest remedy I ever used. Yours, very truly,
W. HARRISON HORNER,

POSTPONED IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE CONTINUED INCLEMENCY OF THE WEATHER.
VERY VALUABLE PROPERTY ON THE OLD YORK ROAD, NEAR THE FIRST TOLLGATE OF THE TURNPIKE.—Will be sold on MONDAY, the 28th day of April, at 4 o'clock, on the premises, (if fair, if not, the next fair day,) all the following described valuable property, viz: All THAT LOT OF GROUND AND IMPROVEMENTS situated on the Old York road, a few hundred yards from the first Toll-gate on the York turnpike, containing about Seven and a-half Acres—formerly belonging to the estate of Wm. Dames. The land is in the highest state of cultivation, having been for the last thirty years cultivated as a Market Garden, with great success. The location is one of the most healthy and desirable in the country. Two never-failing Springs of Water on the place, from which a large supply of ice might be obtained if desired. The improvements consist of a good and comfortable DWELLING, with several out houses.
This property adjoins the elegant mansion of Mr. McDonald on the north, and the country seats of Lloyd W. Williams, Esq., and Dr. Harris on the south and east. The ground is elevated, and commands an extensive view of the city and surrounding country. It is admirably located for the building of Cottages for Summer Resorts. Omnibuses pass eight times daily to and from the city—being but twelve minutes' ride from the Washington Monument.
This property will be held at private sale until the 23d inst., when if not sold, it will be disposed of at auction, to the highest bidder.
Terms of sale.—One-third cash; balance in 6 and 12 months, with interest and approved security.

FRONT STREET THEATRE.
MONDAY, APRIL 28th,
First appearance in this city of the
GREAT PRESTIDIGITATEUR
HERRMANN.
The Managers, Messrs. ULMAN & PALMER, of the Academy of Music, New York, would respectfully call the attention of the public to the appearance in Baltimore of
MONSIEUR HERRMANN,
Who is universally recognized as the GREATEST LIVING PRESTIDIGITATEUR, and whose performances at the Academies of Music in New York, Philadelphia and Boston, where he has played to pronounced the most wonderful in their peculiar line.
The performances of Herrmann are entirely original and novel. Their distinguishing feature is the entire
