THE MOROCCO PRISONERS—THE CASE STATED.

To the Editor of the Boston Courier:

The case of the prisoners from Morocco, now at Fort Warren, attracts very little attention, and no one, to my knowledge, has ventured upon an inquiry as to the validity of the title by which we hold them. The facts in regard to them, as I understand, are these: Mr. Myers, purser of the Confederate steamer Sumter, and Mr. Tunstall, formerly U. S. Consul at Cadiz, were proceeding on a voyage from Cadiz to Lisbon. They landed at Tangier, where the steamer touched, and on returning to embark, they were arrested by the American Consul, carried to the consulate, put in irons, and confined. A short time after, the U. S. sloop Ino arrived at Tangier; the captain landed with a part of his crew armed, and proceeded to the consulate. The Moorish Government, in the meantime, had learned that these men had been arrested as political criminals, and sent a letter of remonstrance to the Consul; but he justified his course by virtue of the treaty provisions between Morocco and the United States. When it became known in Tangier that the prisoners were about to be removed to the Ino, a tumultuous gathering of Europeans and natives took place, and a serious riot was threatened. The American Consul demanded of the Government an armed escort, as a protection against the mob, and threatened to lower his flag if it were refused. The Moorish Government, apprehensive of war, yielded, and the prisoners were marched on the sloop-of-war, and brought home in irons.

The American Consul was doubtless sincere in his belief that he was doing what he had a right to do by virtue of treaty stipulations. It is well known that European and American Consuls in the Barbary States have peculiar powers, and are clothed with judicial functions. The twentieth article of the treaty between the United States and Morocco is as follows:

"If any of the citizens of the United States, or any persons under their protection, shall have any dispute with each other, the Consul shall decide between the parties; and whenever the Consul shall require any aid or assistance from our Government to enforce his decisions, it shall be immediately granted to him."

All foreign Consuls, I believe, have the right (the English and American certainly have) to call upon the Government for an armed force to arrest their countrymen when criminals. But this power has never been construed to extend to political offenders, and it is not pretended that these men were anything but political offenders. Their arrest was a violation of the territory of Morocco, and a denial of the right of asylum. The case is much like that of Martin Koszta, who was seized by orders of the Austrian Consul General on the quay at Smyrna, in 1853, and who was certainly a political offender against Austria. But for this Capt. Ingraham threatened to blow the Hussar out of water, and the whole country exultingly applauded him. Surely, if we mean to earn the respect of other nations, we ought to be consistent. And I may add that the difference between our course towards a strong power like England, in the matter of Mason and Slidell, and our course towards a weak power like Morocco, in the matter of Tunstall and Myers, may suggest comparisons not very flattering to our self-love.

VATTELL.

THE INSURRECTION IN GREECE.

The French Lithographic Sheets contain the following letter from Athens of the 21st ult., with some interesting details respecting the insurgents at Nauplia:

I will not enter into the details of the battles which the force of the Greek Government have fought before fortified entrenchments under the walls of Nauplia. I will merely tell you that much blood has been shed in these engagements. The Royal army which advanced unwilling and with despair in the hearts of the men, suffered severely; 3,500 troops were employed to carry the redoubts, which were defended by only 350 insurgents. The latter retreated into the fortress, where they are determined to resist, and it is impossible to say how long this and affair may last. There can be no mistake about the matter. With the exception of some Generals loaded with favors by King Otho, and who maintain a certain discipline, the army is opposed to this fratricidal war. It casts all the blame on the King, and it is not forgetful of his late coup d'etat, when, after having appointed Admiral Canaris Prime Minister, and having signed a new political programme conformable to the meaning and the spirit of the constitution, he suddenly revoked it, and by so doing created a feeling against him throughout the country. The garrison of Nauplia alone remains in a state of insurrection, and it may be called a mere barrack revolt; but rest assured that the garrison was perfectly in accord with those of Athens, Patras, and Missolonghi. Almost all the officers had long since pledged themselves to make this attempt to force the King to adopt a constitutional course. Almost all the officers had signed a declaration to that effect in a book, and that book has fallen into the hands of the military insurgents of Nauplia. The army in Greece is in an exceptional state. Every soldier regards himself not only as a soldier but as a citizen. In acting as he does, he believes he is applying the 107th article of the Constitution, which places it under the protection of the entire nation.

Lieutenant Colonel Coroneo, of the artillery, one of the chiefs of the insurrection, has been wounded and taken prisoner. I am informed that he has been very cruelly treated by the captain of the steam vessel Otho, on board of which he is confined. The captain is the son of one of the King's aides-de-camp. I merely mention what is stated everywhere, and by the best informed papers. It is believed that the late successes will confirm the Court in its resolution not to make any concession. In the meantime other provinces in Greece are showing a disposition to rise, and insurrectionary movements are to be apprehended throughout Greece. This fact is so true, that the Government has been compelled to withdraw troops from the camp of Argus, before Nauplia, to send into the provinces of Triphilia and Messenia. Fears were entertained likewise for Hydra, but in place of sending troops there the Government has preferred to send some senators, Hydriots by birth, to employ their influence in maintaining tranquillity among the population. In a word, the discontent is general and profound among all classes; and, even admitting that the King may again on this occasion succeed in tranquillizing the country, it will not be for any long period of time. The blood shed at Nauplia has spread consternation throughout the country. Nothing is heard but complaints and cries of vengeance. In Attica almost all the villages are armed. Every day we hear of some lamentable action. The Government is constantly forced to send detachments of troops to one village or another. The crisis, of which the signal was given at Nauplia, cannot be concluded as long as the Court of Greece persists in making any concession to what it calls some discontented insurgents.

P. S.—A second amnesty, it is said, has just been granted to the insurgents of Nauplia, with the exception of eleven chiefs, whom the Government will supply with means to fly to a foreign country without any interference on its part.

THE NASHVILLE.—The Nassau (N. P.) Guardian of April 2 says:

The Confederate steamer Nashville arrived from Charleston via Georgetown, on Sunday last. She brought files of the Charleston Courier to the 22d March, copies of which have been kindly placed at our disposal. The arrival of this celebrated steamer created considerable interest, inasmuch as her "hair-breadth escapes" and daring in the interneciue war in which our American brethren are now unfortunately engaged will be chronicled by some future Macaulay. Having finished her belligerent work in the English Channel; having lain side by side with the Tuscarora in Southampton waters; accomplished her mission at Gibraltar, and run the blockade at Charleston; she now lies peacefully in neutral waters; and, like Cincinnatus on land, returns to her first love, ready to plough the ocean again, freighted with the products of peace, under a new name and a British register.

The same paper also says:

It having been reported by a vessel recently arrived here that two ships-of-war were cruising off Abaco, H. M. S. Bulldog, Commander McKillop, left our harbor at 10 A. M. on Monday, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of this report.—Should such be the case, and the ships be United States cruisers, they will be warned of the irregularity of cruising in British waters for the purpose of intercepting the trade of this port. A schooner arrived on Monday night from Abaco, and reported that cannonading was heard for about twelve hours during her passage here.

VELOCITY OF SHOT.—With the Armstrong guns the velocity of the shot is from 1,150 feet to 1,200 per second. With the old smooth bore muzzle-loaders the velocity is, as nearly as possible, at the rate of 1,600 feet per second, or more than one-fourth greater. But the important difference between the two kinds of ordnance is, that the old smooth bore gun after 500 yards loses its velocity, owing to the resistance of the air, with alarming rapidity, till at 3,000 yards it touches the ground, while on the other hand, the conical form of the Armstrong shot, and the rotary motion communicated to it by the rifling, enable it to maintain almost its initial velocity over a flight of 7,000 yards, or even more. Thus, it is that if the Armstrong and the old smooth bore gun are fired at the same instant, the shot from the latter is instantly ahead of the rifled projectile, but at seven hundred yards their velocities are the same, at 1,200 yards or so the rifled shot is ahead, and at 2,500 or 3,000 the old shot has made its first graze against the earth, while the Armstrong is still in mid career, and can strike with four times the force of the sixty-eight. But when firing at the iron target at short distances two massive shot, one traveling 1,500 feet a second and the other 1,300, have each to be stopped dead in the fractional part of a second, and it is therefore followed, as a matter of course, that the projectile going the fastest inflicted a damage exactly in proportion to the velocity of its flight and the charge with which it was propelled. At close point blank ranges, therefore, the old smooth bore sixty-eight pounder was, weight for weight, more destructive to iron plates than the 110-pounder Armstrong.

RELIABLE NEWS.
BALTIMORE, March 29, 1862.
Mr. Geo. Pearson—Dear Sir: Being troubled with a severe SORE THROAT and Cold (which settled on my lungs), I tried your MEDICATED TAR DROPS, and can speak very flatteringly of their having relieved me in a few hours, and curing me in three or four days. I cheerfully recommend your justly celebrated Tar Drops to all similarly affected, who will find them pleasant, simple, very efficacious, and the cheapest remedy I ever used. Yours, very truly,
W. HARRISON HORNER,
