BALTIMORE.

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1862.

A SCENE IN THE SENATE.

GARRETT DAVIS CALLED TO ORDER, AND TREASON.

There was a scene in the Senate on Monday. The resolution from the House to fix a day of adjournment being up and opposed by Mr. Wilson, of Massachusetts, and Fessenden, of Maine—

Mr. Davis (Union, Ky.) said there was great danger of too much legislation. A great deal of the legislation had been of the most mischievous character, and he wanted to set an early day for the adjournment, so we could not pass any more such acts. You have passed measures at this session which are unconstitutional, iniquitous, and unwise, and which will be resisted by the whole white population of Kentucky, and such as I will counsel my people to resist by every mode of resistance they can devise.

Mr. Wilson (Rep., Mass.)—I call the Senator to order for uttering treasonable sentiments on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. Davis—The Senator does not know the meaning of treason.

The Chair called the Senator to order. He said the Senator would put the words in writing.

Mr. Wilson rent the following words to the Clerk's desk:

"Congress had passed measures which the State of Kentucky would resist, and which I shall counsel my people to resist by every means in their power."

Mr. Davis—That is not what I said. I said that in my judgment, Congress had passed unconstitutional measures, and so far as these measures are unconstitutional, I will advise my constituents to resist them.

Mr. Wilson said that was a great modification of what the Senator said before.

Mr. Fessenden raised the question of order whether any Senator has the right to denounce the acts of Congress as unconstitutional.

Mr. Wilson (Rep., Mass.) sent the following words to the Clerk's desk, as the words used by the Senator from Kentucky, as taken by the reporter:

"You have passed measures, at this present session, that will be resisted by all the white population of Kentucky; measures that are unconstitutional, unwise, unjust, iniquitous, and that I would counsel my people to resist by every mode of resistance that they can devise."

Mr. Wilson—After what the Senator has said in modification, I don't know that I desire to press this question of order, but I called the Senator to order because he used language which I deemed should not be used on the floor of the Senate of the United States. It is language which patriotism cannot sanction. It is language that treason, in days past, has uttered on this floor, and in the other House. Traitors who uttered these words in our early years ago, who made these halls ring with their treasonable utterances, are now in armed rebellion against the Government and the country. I did not wish to hear their language repeated here now by any one, whether they have the courage to follow their example or not. I maintain that this Congress has passed no measure in violation of the Constitution of this country. I desire that when we come out of this bloody contest, forced upon us without cause, that it will be said that we came out of it with the Constitution of the United States vindicated and maintained, and that the Constitution was ample to carry this nation through a rebellion as it has carried it through peace and through foreign wars.

Mr. Davis (Union, Ky.)—When I choose to utter any language, sir, here, or elsewhere, I shall not go to the Senator from Massachusetts to know in what words I shall make my utterances. Not at all, sir. What I said was this, and it is the position I have adhered to all the time, that so far as the legislation of this Congress in the judgment of my people should be unconstitutional, I will advise them to resist it by all the means they can command. I never advised the people of Kentucky to remain neutral, but I advised them to the contrary, and the Senator from Massachusetts, nor no other Senator on this floor, nor any citizen of the United States, entertains more sincerely the desire or purpose, so far as they can to aid the Government in this contest, and that the largest constitutional powers of the Government shall be asserted over every square foot of territory in the United States. But, Mr. President, at the same time I assume, and my people assume, and they have and will always contend, that the only bond of union among the States is the Constitution. They will stand by that Constitution, and fight for it. They will die for it, and they receive it according to the interpretation of the Supreme Court of the United States, and always have.

I would not advise my people, nor any man in America, to oppose any law of Congress which the Supreme Court of the United States has decided to be constitutional. On the contrary, I would advise them to submit to it. But until the Supreme Court of the United States has decided a law to be constitutional, every citizen has a right to judge for himself, upon his own responsibility, of the constitutionality of the law, and he has a right to resist it according to his own judgment, and to submit himself to the proper Courts when his conduct shall become subject to their judgment. If, by his course, he commits the crime of treason, he is justly amenable to the punishment of a traitor. This is my position. I have avowed it repeatedly upon this floor, and I intend to avow it as long as I have the breath of life. The Senator from Massachusetts admonishes us what he will not permit to be done. Well, sir, when I intend to do anything, I don't think of, and do not intend to consult, the Senator from Massachusetts how to direct my line of conduct. I will act for myself. And I here avow that, in my judgment, it is time this Congress should pass the necessary measures and terminate its session. In enforcing this conviction of my own mind, I indulged in the remarks in relation to the improvident, unjust, and, I think to some extent, unconstitutional legislation of the present session.

Mr. Howard desired to call the Senator's attention to a speech he (Davis) made some time since, where he said he would appeal to the armies in the field for the vindication of the Constitution and where he said in relation to the Confiscation bill, that he hoped it would not pass. If it did pass, then another war, but a just war, would be begun. He asked if he meant the utter menace, that if the bill passed he would go to the army and preach disaffection and mutiny. He thought this language treasonable and calculated to stir up mutiny, and denounced it as such.

Mr. Davis said the Senator was entirely misinterpreting his language and then denounced his own misinterpretation. If any people or party undertook to carry out unconstitutional measures he would resist them. The people of Kentucky acknowledge obedience to the constitutional law, but they have the right and intend to resist by every means they can command any execution of unconstitutional law, and intend to make the same war on the party who attempted to enforce such law as they did on the Southern secessionists.

Mr. Fessenden, (Republican, of Maine.)—I suppose what a majority of the Senate decide to do in reference to the business of the Senate, they will do, and the Senator and myself, if we happen to be in the minority, must submit with the best grace we can. Now, sir, with reference to what the Senator has said about resistance, I really do not attach so much consequence to what he said as some of my friends. I believe he does not mean to say he would counsel armed resistance at once, because he considers some legislation of this body to be not according to the Constitution. Nor would he be taken literally when he says every citizen has a right to take the consequences of resistance, because if that right exists in one it exists in many, and that amounts to rebellion. That cannot be the resistance he means, for he is counseling us to put down rebellion.

Mr. Davis—I have said that the right of revolution was the last right to be exercised, and I would counsel my people to submit to any oppression that was at all tolerable before resorting to that right. Of course, the Senator's idea of my resisting is correct. We would resist according to the mode and form we deemed most advisable to us; and if we resisted to the last resort, it is a matter which would not come all at once; but whenever causes exist in sufficient force to authorize such a mode, I would counsel it.

Mr. Fessenden—If the Senator should counsel them to stand it just as long as tolerable, I think it would be good counsel. Therefore, it is true the Senator did not mean to counsel armed resistance, because he thought a law unconstitutional. He did not mean to counsel them to resist by trying the question in the courts, for that everybody would do. What did he mean, then? Why he meant he would resist by a war of words. Well, sir, we have had that from the Senator already, and it is yet tolerable, and it does not harm any one; and I would counsel my friends here and elsewhere not to trouble themselves about it at all.

The resolution of adjournment was laid on the table, and Mr. Wilson withdrew his motion.

FATAL DUEL.—A fatal duel was fought near Doren, Mason county, Ky., on Thursday afternoon, between Col. Leonidas Metcalfe and Mr. Wm. B. Casto, in which the latter was killed. The difficulty between the parties originated from an old grudge entertained by Casto against Metcalfe, the latter having been instrumental last fall in causing the arrest of Casto, and other rabid secessionists of Maysville, and having them incarcerated at Fort Warren. Col. Metcalfe was at that time at the head of a fragmentary regiment, which performed good service in clearing the county, from Paris to Mt. Sterling, of rebels, his force being the advance guard of Gen. Nelson's division. His men were subsequently consolidated with other regiments. He is a son of Ex-Governor Metcalfe of Kentucky, and resides in Nicholas county. Casto was the challenging party. The weapons used were Minie rifles; distance 60 yards. At the first fire Casto fell, mortally wounded, and expired in a short time. Col. Metcalfe was uninjured.

MORE BARRIER AID FOR THE CONFEDERATES.—By the arrival of the brig Alma at this port to-day from Nassau, New Providence, we learn that the Confederate steamer Orito had just arrived at Nassau from Southampton, England, with a cargo of arms for the Confederates; and that the British steamers Stella and Minnie were also in port, having arrived from Southampton with cargoes of arms, saltpetre and salt, and were awaiting an opportunity to run the blockade.—*N. STILL ANOTHER TRIUMPH.
BALTIMORE, May 1st, 1862.
I have experienced so much benefit by using PEARSON'S MEDICATED TAR DROPS, that I believe it not only a duty but a pleasure, to make it known to others. I was afflicted with a Sore Throat and Dry Cough, which debilitated me so that I could get no rest. My friends told me that I had the consumption. I am now happy to inform you that your MEDICATED TAR DROPS have cured me.
I find that your MEDICATED TAR DROPS are counterfeited, and I caution the afflicted to be on their guard. This is really a scheme that so efficacious a remedy should be injured by unprincipled men. I am glad, however, to see that your signature is now on each package, and I advise those who purchase to bear that in mind.
Yours, truly, HENRY FISHER,
No. 15 North Bond street.
PEARSON'S MEDICATED TAR DROPS are prepared and sold by GEO. PEARSON, No. 5 Liberty street, Baltimore. Sold also by the principal Druggists at 10 cents per package.
