THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA.

From the London Times, June 6.

* * * * * * *

Meantime, as the armies are advancing and fleets are fighting, we look in vain for a token of Union sentiment in the country. Suffolk was found almost deserted—those remaining very bitter in their feelings and expressions; and in New Orleans itself, whence had come such stories of Union meetings, no demonstration of Unionism was made in public, at all events. Great want of confidence prevailed, and the city, isolated and guarded on all sides, was ruled by General Butler very much as Warsaw was governed in former days by Constantine. Cut off from communication with the West and with Alabama, Beauregard is already suffering from want of provisions, and, with the scarcity and increasing heat, sickness and pestilence begin to stalk through his crowded camps.

But let us now take a view of the Federals as they are drawn by themselves in that remote corner of their world, where they will allow no stranger to penetrate, and whence General Halleck has just been warning off all negroes and newspaper reporters. Let us premise that in Virginia the Federals "regularly appropriate" whatever corn they find. This is described as the "reliance" of the people till next harvest; and who are the people? "Silent but rank rebels." Never was the like of such determination read of.

A correspondent spent an evening with a refined and intelligent family. "You have conquered Virginia," said they to him, "but not us. Virginia may go back into the Union, but we will not, of with her; and when she is conquered, if she goes back, we will set our faces Southwards, and leave our homes to the invader." He complains again that "the Rebels ravage them; yet, while they will give them everything they have, nine-tenths of them would not part with any article for our Bank or Treasury notes—very few of them even for specie." In Norfolk, again, "very little Union sentiment is expressed." If the Federal accounts are to be believed in anything it must be in reference to such points as these; what else is to be believed, indeed, it is difficult to determine. The other day we were told the Federal fleet sustained no damage in the conflict on the Mississippi near Fort Wright, and the statement had, apparently, official sanction. Now we learn from the Captain of the fleet that the iron-clad Cincinnati was sunk, and the Mound City so crippled that she had to be taken to Cairo to repair.

If we may credit the Federal newspaper correspondents, the Union army under Halleck, of which so much is expected, was "unfit to resist attack," and was in a most dangerous position. It occupied on the right the line of railway near Purdy, and from there extended towards Jacinto—thus forming, as it is described, a series of irregular converging radii, occupying 200 degrees of a circle, of which Corinth is the centre. The roads are described as blocked up with baggage wagons and artillery, and in the very worst condition; the horses of artillery and cavalry, and the mules of the baggage wagons, worn out and dying by hundreds. "The heedless and infuriated drivers, who seem as incapable of reason as the beasts they ought to take care of, are only more intemperate, furious, and cruel in consequence of the desperate condition of the roads." "It is a melancholy sight; our men are scattered between the front and the river over twenty miles of country, some looking for rations, others in search of clothing, but very few in line." Indeed, it is added that many regiments which came into the field more than 1,000 strong have now less than 500 in their ranks. And what of the army?

In the first place, General Halleck "never visits the lines." He is described as "bearing a most striking resemblance to an oleaginous Methodist parson dressed in regimentals, with a wide stiff-rimmed black felt hat sticking on the back of his head at an acute angle with the ground." When on horseback his Wesleyan character is still more prominent, and he "neither looks like a soldier nor rides like one." The chief of the staff is depicted as the image of Don Quixote on Rosinante, with enormous new-fangled leggings buttoned over his shrunken calves. General Grant "is like a village lawyer, an inveterate smoker," "who has made himself the laughing-stock of the army by his letter" about the battle of Pittsburg Landing, in which his attempts to excuse himself are "insults to the intelligence of all brave men." Gen. Pope is "a large portly man of sociable bearing, the type of a bon vivant—ambitious and vain." The officers of the army generally are thus described by the special correspondent of an American journal: "The officer is becoming by his vices, intemperance, vanity, and jealousy, a cruel and frequently a brutish tyrant, instead of a reasonable, zealous, and exemplary fellow-soldier. The lazy, indifferent, and reckless habits of the officers are copied tenfold by the men." As to the relations between the two in this army of volunteers, read the following description:

"The unnatural gap which exists between the officer and the enlisted man, which has existed ever since the rebellion, is growing wider, deeper, darker, and more unnatural. The private is by a long course of neglect becoming more degraded, wretched, and brutalized."

And, while they are thus assembled within an easy striking blow of Beauregard, trembling lest they should be attacked, "the knavish dealing of contractors presses more heavily on the army than ever; hardly a bale of hay or sack of oats, corn, or potatoes holds its full weight; and the horses are falling in the shafts from starvation and cruelty." It is probably such pictures as these which have roused General Halleck's indignation against the press, but, on the whole, considering the facilities it affords to the Federal Government to deceive those who believe it, "the oleaginous person" might forgive these little pen and ink drawings.

The following is an extract from a private letter, dated Virginia, May 9:

"Anxious as I am to see you all again, I am thankful that you are spared the sight of our present misery,—our homes and State ravaged from one end to the other, our houses robbed of their most valued contents, our servants seduced from our service, our crops taken, our stock destroyed or taken off, and, saddest of all, our homes left to but women and children! No husband, no son, no brother left. The armed plunderer, the licentious brutal soldier, takes what he covets, and sometimes that which is dearer than life or property. Only a few days since Mr. R. E. S——, who married sweet H. L——, was shot dead by a soldier on entering the house of a poor widow, who had sent to beg his timely protection for herself and daughters. He was killed at one door and his overseer at another, each leaving a family of seven or more children, and this in a country now in the possession of the Northern States, and, of course, entitled to their protection wherever the flag waves over it. Mr. D——, with many others imprisoned—some manacled—and for no crime but charity! which I dare say they would have given to all, friend or foe.—Both Mr. and Mrs. D—— are benevolent and able, and give with an open hand, and in these times there are many who need it; but, because the wives and children of absent soldiers left here, and thus forming a part of the poor of the town, shared this bounty, they were seized and treated as criminals. My horses, servants, and furniture, &c., have been heavily robbed, notwithstanding a very kind disposition on the part of many of my old friends connected with the army and Government to protect me.

"No mind can conceive the progression of human passion once given up to licence. No civil law, and every wretch armed by authority against you to carry out unrestrained his wretched purposes, the means even of household defence taken from you, not even a shot gun allowed. I cannot foresee anything but utter ruin to North and South. Now they are arming the slaves for summer use, I do not anticipate from it the mischief they promise themselves; but it will be ruin to the North and the South, and to the neutralities of Europe, if they need cotton, as it is to all here, one crop being now destroyed, none planted this year, and labor utterly disorganized, which cannot be got together again at all—perhaps three years it will amount to—unless the Yankees, as they will do, reopen the slave trade and re-establish the institution. No cotton otherwise. Far better for the interests of humanity, in Europe as well as here, that this war been checked; and it is to me amazing that England and France have not so considered it. If their people are suffering now from the loss of one crop, and that crop now destroyed since New Orleans is taken, not detained by blockade, what is to become of them in two or three years? The channels of trade and the occupations of the masses are not so easily resumed or turned. But it is needless to talk now; the thing is done. The North are deep in our blood, and are given up to the kingdom of Satan.

"This is the most humbled place you ever saw. The ladies live shut up; the gentlemen have no employment; all their professions are brought to a stand by having an oath required of them they will not take. Thus by force they are supplanted entirely by Northern people, and are told that military law is a quicker remedy than civil, if they dare to test the question of a new Governor in Virginia, elected in Wheeling, and whose salary depends upon the fees from licences, &c. I mourn, however, for a lost and happy country, not for property. All not even for children, would their sacrifice bring back a blessing to others. But all is lost in one short year by a wicked Administration.

* * * * * * *

General Johnston is the horror of McClellan's path, his bête noire. In all his silly despatches to Government or wife, he sees General Johnston before him, magnifying his army into a host, and again rejoicing that he occupies his quarters of the night before. I still hope he may save his State and uphold the cause of civil liberty. Before this reaches you the struggle in Virginia will be over; but they must press on or they have done nothing. Seaboard is all they have, and unless they can possess the people they have a barren conquest."

Governor Todd, of Ohio, is making another strong effort to fill up the five regiments authorized to be raised in that State for three years or during the war, two of which are complete.—New York Tribune, June 20.

INDIAN QUEEN HOTEL.—Travellers speak highly of the Indian Queen Hotel, Wilmington, Del. There is no better conducted public house, it is said, this side the Atlantic seaboard. Everything that a guest may wish may be had at small cost, together with the kindest possible treatment. The house is well ventilated, the beds soft and downy, and the latest modern household conveniences to be met with in every direction. The table groans with luxuries, and the bar is filled with the purest and best of liquors. If any of our readers should stop in Wilmington over night, they would be much pleased, we know, by stopping with Mr. CHAS M. ALMOND, of the Indian Queen. je24 eolm*

LATEST FROM KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 17, 1862.

GEO. PEARSON, Esq.

Dear Sir—I feel it a duty to express to you my sincere acknowledgments of the benefit derived from the use of a package of your MEDICATED TAR DROPS.

I was suffering with a SEVERE COUGH and SORE THROAT, when a friend presented me with a package of your celebrated TAR DROPS, and when I used them, I was free to confess it was more to gratify my appetite for sweetmeats than the idea of deriving any good from them; but really, the rapid allaying of the irritation and subsequent entire cure of the cough, induces me to thank you, and I take great pleasure in recommending to the public so effective a compound. Respectfully yours, J. E. SMITH, M. D., Assistant Surgeon Artillery Brigade U. S. A.

PEARSON'S MEDICATED TAR DROPS are prepared and sold by GEO. PEARSON, No. 5 North Liberty street, Baltimore, at 10 cents per package. Sold also by all the principal Druggists. Je21 tf

THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS PARTIALLY RESTORED.—After an involuntary absence of about three months, during which time we were made familiar with the classic and once had owed grounds of Fort McHenry—we again resume, partially, our old vocation of "enlightening the world with lamp-black." OUR PRESS, being deemed dangerous by the Government, has been kindly limited, and, for the future, instead of publishing "THE SOUTH, or any other paper, without consent of the Commanding General," we shall modestly labor in the humbler department of the "art preservative of all arts," by executing every description of BOOK AND JOB PRINTING, hoping through that medium to sustain ourselves and those dependent upon us and would earnestly appeal to our friends to favor us with their patronage.
