MCCLELLAN AND HIS ARMY.

It must be understood that while the falling back of the extreme right wing of our army, including the force near Hanover Court House and Mechanicsville—which latter were really outposts for the defence of White House Landing, and to prevent Confederate communication between Richmond and Northern and Western Virginia, by way of the railroads in that direction—was a movement which McClellan had for weeks contemplated, he had not meant to fall back beyond the position which he had fortified on the west side of the Chickahominy, between New Bridge and Bottom Bridge, unless actually forced to do so. This had been his centre—or rather, New Bridge had marked the centre and Bottom Bridge the left of his right wing. Here were his best intrenchments, and his siege guns; and after drawing in or swinging round his extreme right to this position, here he would make a stand, if it should not be deemed wholly impracticable. But he did not retreat to this position until several which foresight could suggest, in case it should be forced upon him. He had sent Col. Alexander to select a position for his entire army, on the high grounds near the James river. Turkey Bend, near the bridge across Turkey Creek, had been selected.

The fight on Friday, and especially the terrific struggle on the east side of the Chickahominy, towards evening, rendered it certain that this position could not be held, if time could not be had to make its defences as impregnable in their rear, or on the rear, as they had originally been on the west. A council of war was held—the first formal one that had been called since reaching the Peninsula—and a retreat through Chickahominy Swamp, or White Oak Swamp, was determined upon. New roads had to be cut, and bridges across the creek had to be built, as, upon the single road leading to Turkey Bend it would require four days for our army and its wagons to reach their destination. Then the march must be in silence, for if the Confederates knew of it in time, they could come down from Richmond, take a position on the high ground between the swamp and the James river, and annihilate our troops as they emerged, or drive them back in confusion to the Chickahominy, there to be met by Jackson and again threatened with annihilation. The ground was carefully reconnoitered—experienced guides were provided—mules were excluded from the columns, lest their braying should betray our movements—the soldiers were cautioned not to speak above a whisper; and then, at dead of night, that solemn march commenced. Monday morning saw it successful. But Monday afternoon witnessed one of the fiercest fights of the war—the enemy in the end flying in confusion, with a loss of at least four thousand in killed and wounded.

On Tuesday, with fresh troops, the Confederates again made their appearance, and the battle raged nearly all day; but our artillery told the story for about ten thousand of their number, and again they were glad to retreat—this time in terrible haste and complete disorder.

At present, our army is supposed to be in a perfectly secure position. It cannot be flanked, and probably will not be attacked. It has had several days of rest, and will soon be ready, if sufficiently reinforced, for a forward movement. We presume it will not menace Richmond in connection with the gunboats; but in order to have the co-operation of these, Fort Darling must be taken by an attack in the rear. This attack will undoubtedly be made very soon; but heavy guns will have to be used, and those who are expecting it to fall within a day or two, are probably destined to be disappointed. When it has fallen, and the obstructions in the river have been removed, there can be no doubt that we shall be able to reach Richmond with far less fighting than has occurred since the 25th of June.

One word in regard to McClellan's reinforcements. We see it stated that forty thousand troops were sent to him after he reached the Chickahominy. This cannot be true; for it is admitted that when these battles commenced, he had less than one hundred thousand men; and it is not shown from whence he derived more than twenty thousand after the battle at Williamsburg. It is now represented that he is receiving immense reinforcements by way of the James river. But this, also, is not true. Only Shields' division, of four or five thousand, we presume, has come to our army. Wednesday, three regiments of cavalry were on their way, but we do not believe that we will get twenty thousand men. Banks is sent for from the West. Halleck was allowed to have two hundred and twenty thousand troops in his meditated attack upon Corinth. But from the first, McClellan has not had half the number that he needed.

The Confederate army at Yorktown, it is shown by Confederate documents, numbered eighty-five thousand; and these were all that could be there used to advantage. When the army reached the Chickahominy, the Confederate strength was probably not much less than one hundred and fifty thousand, and could have been greatly reinforced at two days' notice. McClellan had, probably, less than eighty-five thousand effective men, and six thousand of these were killed, wounded or missing after the battle of Fair Oaks. Of course it would have been folly for him to attack the enemy without first erecting some defences behind which to retreat in case of disaster, and without bringing to his aid the heavy siege guns which had rendered him so strong before Yorktown.

The plain truth is, the Black Republican politicians have been determined to kill off McClellan, even if they sacrificed the entire army of the Potomac; and these politicians have controlled the War Department. When Stonewall Jackson threatened the Upper Potomac with only a portion of his army—say, fifteen or twenty thousand men—Secretary Stanton ordered to Washington the entire militia of not less than nine States, including New York and Pennsylvania; an effective force of two or three hundred thousand men! But while McClellan was being threatened by an army of nearly two hundred thousand, and was in constant danger of annihilation, he sent him barely enough, if indeed he sent him enough, to fill the ranks of these regiments which had been thinned by disease and battle! He was no stronger on the 25th of June than when he stood before Yorktown. Nay, he was not so strong, if we are correctly informed, by some thousands. When he started for Yorktown, he asked for more troops. The reply was, an order from the War Department to stop recruiting! Before Richmond he again called for more troops. The Secretary of War called for the militia of nine States to defend Washington; but when he found Washington was not in danger, countermanded the order, and still left McClellan helpless.

A PICTURESQUE ARMY.

A correspondent of the Charleston Courier thus describes General Price and his army:

As few people have an idea of the character of the man, I give you a hasty pen-and-ink sketch, as he appeared to me during a brief interview. He is over six feet in height, with a frame to match, full but not portly, and straight as an Indian. His carriage is marked with dignity, grace and gentleness, and every motion bespeaks the at ease and presence of the well bred gentleman. He has a large Websterian head, covered with a growth of thick white hair; a high, broad, intellectual forehead; florid face, no beard, and a mouth among whose latent smiles you never fail to discover the iron will that surmounts all obstacles.

The army of General Price is made up of the extremes. It is a heterogeneous mix ure of all human compounds, and represents in its various elements every condition of Western life. There are the old and the young, the rich and poor, the high and low, the grave and the gay, the planter and the laborer, the farmer and clerk, hunter and boatman, merchant and woodman—men, too, who have come from every State and been broned in every latitude, from the mountains of the Northwest to the pampas of Mexico.

Every man has come from his homestead fitted with the best and strongest that loving mothers, wives and sisters could put upon him. And the spectacle presented as they are drawn up in line, whether for marching or inspection, necessarily forms an arabesque pattern of the most partl colored crowd of people upon which human eyes ever rested. Some are in black—full civilian's dress, with beaver hats and frock coats; some in homespun drab; some in grey, blue and streaked; some in nothing but red shirts, pants and big-top boots; some attempt a display with the old-fashioned militia uniforms of their forefathers; some have banners floating from their "outer walls" in the rear; some would pass for our friend, the Georgia major, who used to wear nothing but his shirt-collar and a pair of spurs.

PARSON BROWNLOW'S BOOK IN RICHMOND.—Among the many applications for agencies received by George W. Childs, Parson Brownlow's publisher, is one from a Yankee soldier in the army near Richmond, asking the Richmond agency of the book. The letter is as follows:

"BEFORE RICHMOND, June 24, 1862.

"Have you disposed of the agency for Richmond for Parson Brownlow's book? If not, I would like to secure it, on condition of my occupying and canvassing the ground there as soon as practicable after Richmond is taken. In reference to the latter point, I would state that I have peculiar facilities for obtaining information that would enable me to go into the matter understandingly, so far as Richmond is concerned.

"I know I could do well with it in Richmond, both among our troops and among the citizens, when the place is taken, which will be in a few days.

"I wish an answer from you in reference to the matter at once.

"Yours truly, ——."

STRIKE IN NEW YORK.—The grain shovellers are not at work to-day. Some two thousand of them are assembled this morning, from Coenties Slip to Broad street, demanding that the elevators shall be dispensed with, claiming that those machines destroy their business and endanger their lives, by suffocation. They express their determination not to work if the elevators are continued in use.—N. Y. Post.

LATEST FROM KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE, KY., June 17, 1862.

GEO. PEARSON, Esq.

Dear Sir—I feel it a duty to express to you my sincere acknowledgments of the benefit derived from the use of a package of your MEDICATED TAR DROPS.

I was suffering with a SEVERE COUGH and SORE THROAT, when a friend presented me with a package of your celebrated TAR DROPS, and when I used them, I was free to confess it was more to gratify my appetite for sweetmeats than the idea of deriving any good from them; but really, the rapid alleviating of the irritation and subsequent entire cure of the cough, induces me to thank you, and I take great pleasure in recommending to the public so effective a compound. Respectfully yours, J. E. SMITH, M. D.,
